MEMOIR OF DANIEL A. WHITE.

BY GEORGE W. BRIGGS.

Read at a Meeting of the Essex Institute, Monday evening, January 4, 1864.

BOYHOOD AND YOUTH.

DANIEL APPLETON WHITE was born in that part of the old town of Methuen which is now included in the City of Lawrence, June 7th, 1776. His ancestor, William White, came to this country from Haverhill, Norfolk Co., England, in 1635, in company with Rev. Mr. Ward, the first minister of Haverhill, Mass. Mr. White first went to Ipswich, thence to Newbury; but finally settled at Haverhill. The place on which he built his house is still occupied by a lineal descendant, who bears the name of White, and has been in the possession of the family since the settlement of the town in 1640. William White died Sept. 28th, 1690, when about eighty years of age. John White, his descendant in the fifth generation, the father of the subject of this memoir, was born Feb. 7th, 1719-20. He removed to Methuen about the year 1772, and died July 11th, 1800. He was twice married; first to Mrs. Miriam Hazen, in 1753, by whom he had six children; and again to Elizabeth Haynes, the mother of Daniel, Feb. 18th, 1767. She had eleven children, of whom Daniel was the fifth.+ Thirteen of this family of seventeen, had families of their own.

^{*} The writer desires to refer to the admirable memoir of Judge White, by Rev. Dr. Walker, published in the proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society, which contains many things of which he would have been glad to avail himself in this brief sketch, if they had not been already used by a far more skilful hand.

The genealogy is as follows: John White, the only son of William and Mary White, married Hannah French, at Salem, Nov. 25th, 1662, and died Jan. 1st, 1668, at the age of 29 years. His only son, Capt. John White, was born March 8th, 1663-4. He married Lydia Gilman, of Exeter, Oct. 24th, 1687, and died Nov. 20th, 1727. He had a large family of fourteen children, one of whom, Timothy White, graduated at Harvard College in 1720. His fourth child, Deacon William White, the grandfather of Daniel, was born Jan. 18th, 1693-4, and died Dec. 11th, 1737. He was married in Boston, June 12th, 1716, to Sarah Phillips, sister of Rev. Samuel Phillips, of Andover Daniel's childhood and youth were passed upon his father's farm until he went to Atkinson Academy, in June 1792, when he was just sixteen years old. In a charming autobiographical sketch written for his children, during a long illness, in the winter of 1836-7, and which he says he might never have found "time and opportunity to write in a state of health," he has drawn a delightful picture of his early life. It unveils the beauty of a genuine New England home. Everything conspired to make his boyhood and youth bright and happy. His father's farm was charmingly situated, stretching from the Spicket to the Merrimac, when both of those streams flowed on through level meadows, or rushed over falls and rocks, in their native grace and wildness. In the Salem Gazette of June 17th, 1796, Rev. Dr. Bentley gave a very enthusiastic account of a visit which he had then lately made to this part of Methuen, and of the beauty of the cascades and falls upon the rivers. The farm itself abounded in wood, as well as in finely cultivated fields; thus presenting a variety of beautiful scenery, with picturesque and delightful prospects. Birds flocked among the trees, and berries abounded in the pastures. A combination of circumstances was presented, so far as external nature was concerned, of which the subject of our memoir always spoke with delight and gratitude.

Other influences seemed equally propitious. These bright surroundings were a fit symbol of the home itself. His father's house was filled with young and loving hearts, and graced by the frequent presence of the most cultivated people in the neighborhood, of many of whom he gives attractive sketches, and of relatives from other places, and visitors to the town, who were welcomed with an abounding hospitality. It was presided over with a happy blending of wisdom and affection. He gives a picture of his parents in the following words:

"My father was a tall, erect and finely formed man; and with his handsome suit of snuff-colored cloth, which my mother caused to be annually manufactured for him, and his beaver hat, he always appeared in the character of a gentleman farmer. Well skilled in overlooking and directing the management of his farm, he did little more himself than sow the grain, which he could do better than any one else, and occasionally to follow the plough, and in Summer to stir up the hay. I speak of the time when I was a boy at home, and he was from sixty to seventy years of age. My mother, burdened with the care of a numerous and increasing family, manifested a devotion to her duties in the relation of wife and mother, above all praise. Though so much younger than my father, she seemed to me to be exactly suited to him in all respects, and he to her. I have no recollection of an unkind look or word that ever passed between them, though my father was not unfrequently roused to an indignant and somewhat harsh expression of his feelings in respect to others."

The features of his father's character, and its excellence, are still more distinctly stated in an Obituary Notice in the Mass. Mercury, in Boston, July 18th, 1800. After speaking of his peculiar fondness for rural occupations and domestic life, the writer says:—

"Born in affluence, he lived easy. Economy and industry were inherent virtues; but possessing a generous heart, he added not to his possessions. Riches were not his God, and money he esteemed only for its necessary uses. He possessed a strong mind, and a firm understanding. Cheerfulness was his constant companion. His heart overflowed at the reception of a friend. The poor have called him blessed. Courteous in his deportment; resolute in enterprise; just and quick in apprehension, but compassionate in temper; open and explicit in all his views, he lived respected and died happy."

With such parents, the spirit of the household must have been one of wisdom as well as love. There was a perfect toleration of all innocent youthful sports. The parents were strictly religious, connected with the Baptist denomination. But they were very careful to make no requisition upon the Sabbath, which would give their children gloomy associations with that day. The family were required to attend meeting, and read some chapters in the Bible. Still, both before and after Public Worship, they were permitted to walk over the farm and enjoy the influences of nature, and the loving intercourse of innocent and youthful hearts. The liberty of the household is thus described: "Our freedom in all respects was greater and more delightful, than that of any boys I ever knew, situated as we were." But there was a quiet authority, an omnipresent influence which drew those young hearts towards generous affections and Christian purposes. It was a power all the more effective, perhaps, because so seldom exerted in any direct, outward pressure. The theory of early education which the son states as his own ideal in later years, grew out of the life of that Methuen home. It was a theory which recognized the fact, that "the spontaneous life, in its own time and place, is as sacred as the reflective and moral life;" a theory that aimed to avoid "the excess of regulation and discipline, as much as the opposite extreme of indulgence," and which, while it insisted upon "implicit obedience as the indispensable foundation of character, endeavoured to allow nature free scope in unfolding and maturing all her generous feelings and principles." It was the power of character, the beauty of holiness, rather than direct authority, which moulded the lives in his early home. These spiritual forces certainly did their work upon himself. In his case, "the boy was father of the man." The features of his manhood distinctly unfold themselves in the picture which he draws of his youth; and we feel that he not only speaks the simplest truth when he says, "Innocence and simplicity had not deserted me, certainly, when, at the age of sixteen, I left home for the Academy and the College," but that these graces became so inwrought into his character amid the benign influences of his early home that they never deserted him, and accompanied him as angels on either hand till he passed on to a new and still higher youth.

Only two troubles clouded his youthful days. The first and greatest of these came from his questionings upon the subject of religion. Those questionings began at a very early date. From his childhood he had been accustomed to read the Bible; and he had read it through before he was eight years old. Many of its narratives made a deep impression upon his imagination. He associated the characters in the Bible with persons of the same name whom Joseph was the image of his own brother Joseph. "Stephen, the first martyr, looked like Stephen Sargent, the older son of a neighbor." The father of the Prodigal Son bore the image of his own father, and the elder brother that of his brother John. "And so," he says, "they have since appeared." He gave "a local habitation," also, to the scenes of sacred history, by fixing upon some spot upon the farm, which seemed suited to the transaction represented. Thus both his mind and his imagination were early filled with religious thoughts and associations. Though eminently social and cheerful in temperament, both in early and later life, he possessed a thoughtful nature, and had a peculiar interest in religious exercises, even in his boyhood. The following extract from his Journal gives a striking proof of this:

"I remember that the day I was eleven years old, June 7, 1787, there was the raising of a parsonage house, for Mr. Williams, a great occasion for boys, and the funeral of a Mrs. Frye, three or four miles off, and that while others went to the raising, I walked to the funeral in preference, and back to the graveyard, nearly as far."

He mentions also the funeral of a young married friend not long after wards,—a great favorite of his on account of her beauty, and kindness to him, which affected him deeply. With characteristic candor, he says, "The excitement and sympathy felt on these solemn occasions afforded me, I suppose, something of the sort of pleasure derived from witnessing the pathetic scenes of a tragedy; and this may in part account for my desire to attend them." But he truly adds, "It was doubtless owing in part to their being in accordance with my religious feelings."

A nature so predisposed to thoughtfulness, to which the scenes and characters of Sacred History became real by constant reading of the Bible; a nature unfolded in the atmosphere of a religious home, where he heard the con-described me, certainly, when, at the age of sixteen, I left home for the Arade and the College," but that these grades became so inwrought into his elemental the booign influences of his carry home that they never described him, a surgels on either hand till he pasted on to a new and a bigher youth.

Only two troubles clouded his youthful days. The first and greatest these came from his questionings upon the sulphood he had been are tionings begun at a very sariy date. From his childhood he had been are toomed to read the Bible; and he had read it through before he was eight yet to med to read the Bible; and he had read it through before he was eight yet old. Though entire over early filled with relaying thoughts and associations. Though entirely action of the possessed a thoughtful nature, and had these interest in religious exercises, even in his beylood. The following peculius interest in religious exercises, even in his beylood. The following entrest from his Journal gives a striking proof of this:

"I remember that the day I was oleven years old Jone 7, 1787, there we the raising of a parsonauc house, for Mr. Williams, a great occurion for her and the fragenal of a Mrs. Frre three or four miles off, and that while other went to the mising, I walked to the funeral in profesence, and back to the graverard, again, a fig."

He mentions also the functal of a young married friend not long after wards,—a great favorite of his on account of her beauty, and kindness to his which affected his deeply. With characteristic randes, he mys. The excitance and sympathy felt on three solean occasions afforded me, I suppose, some thing of the sort of pleasure derived from witnessing the pathotic scenes of trangedy; and this may be part account for my desire to attend them. But I trangedy; and this may in part account for my desire to attend them. But I may adds, "It was doubtless awing in part to their being in accordance wit my religious feelings."

A nature so predisposed to thoughthdaese to which the secrets and chanceters of Secred History became real by constant resultar of the Bellisher a meters of Secred in the atmosphere of a religious home, where he beard the conversation of the ministers who were such frequent guests at his father's house, must have been open to intense religious impressions. But they came in a form that profoundly tried him. His parents belonged to the "New Lights," as they were then termed, and fully sympathized with the doctrines of Whitefield; and the idea became impressed upon the boy's mind that the true religion could only be gained by a miraculous change of heart, without which the soul must be forever lost. He says:

"Everything conspired to deepen these awful impressions, and to produce in my mind a full conviction that such, and such only, were the true doctrines of Christianity. I well remember that it seemed astonishing that we should be unable to do anything to save our souls from perdition, when we were so constantly commanded in the Bible to exert ourselves for the purpose; to strive to enter in at the strait gate, and were promised a reward for our endeavors. But these expressions were explained away in a manner which I did not think of questioning. We could not strive, or knock, or even ask aright, without the suggestions and aid of the Holy Spirit. Hence, at about the age of twelve or fifteen, I was reduced to a state of most distressing perplexity, almost despair, as to my future condition."

Many persons trained in these New England homes have known an expe-Happily the profound impressions already made upon rience similar to his. his heart became an anchor amid the agitations of his thought, and held him in true loyalty to religion itself, in the struggles of his youth and early manhood, until after a number of years he dared fully to trust the convictions which had then begun to form themselves in his mind. At one time he says, that "he does not know what might have been the fate of his christian faith, if he had not found some satisfactory substitute for these first convictions. Per. haps it might have been wholly wrecked." But a mind like his was sure to find a satisfactory substitute. When the heart is penetrated by a reverence and awe for religious truth, faith cannot suffer wreck. If Priestly's writings, which he read with so much interest when an under graduate, or the writings of other men, had not helped to a solution of his difficulties, the workings of truth, the teachings of experience, and the leadings of the divine spirit, must have brought him to a settled faith. In religious things, indeed, as in other respects, his manhood was the natural development of his early character. He says, "It is remarkable how little have changed my impressions as then received of Jesus, and his disciples, by subsequent reading and reflection. divine superiority of Jesus to his disciples, and all other men, was then clear to me, as it has been ever since." His character and training pre-determined the faith in which he finally rested; the faith "which permitted, and taught him to behold in his Creator a kind and beneficent father; in his Savior, an infallible guide, teacher and friend; and in the Holy Spirit a sure and never failing reward for every sincere endeavor to do the will of God, to improve his gifts, and fulfil the law of love to his creatures." God graciously led him out of all his doubts to a religion whose final expression was, "My reliance is upon the mercy of God in Jesus Christ, and my own repentance for sin, which I know I have felt for years; and therefore I have perfect trust and peace."

The only other trouble of his youthful days grew out of his great desire to obtain a public education. This seemed very doubtful for a long time. Although his father was in easy circumstances, with his family of seventeen children, it was difficult to meet the expense of sending one of his sons to the University. But this difficulty was happily solved. In his earlier school-days Daniel was behind the other boys; and he describes the mortification which he felt upon one occasion, on that account. But he soon outstripped them by diligent application, and therefore became a favorite with his various instructors. One of them, a somewhat eccentric man, when he had taken the foot of the spelling-class in consequence of detention at home by sickness, but was so fortunate as to regain his usual place at the head on the first evening, ordered a general clapping of hands of the whole school. It was a compliment which seems to have been repeatedly awarded him. His first severe illness was occasioned by his devotion to study. After having been hard at work with the men in the woods in Winter, he came home and got into the bedroom window to perform sums in Arithmetic, which, as he expresses it, was then his hobby. He thus became, unconsciously, so thoroughly chilled, that the consequence was a dangerous fever. But such diligence had its reward, and on the 11th of June, 1792, he was sent to Atkinson Academy, then under the charge of Mr. Silas Dinsmoor, a graduate of the previous year, and an excellent instructor. He had a permit to enter from Rev. Stephen Peabody, one of the Trustees, whose eminent character and services were both so gratefully, and so gracefully depicted by the late Rev. Dr. Gilman in the Christian Examiner for May, 1847, and whose constant friendship he always enjoyed. Here, too, he secured the marked favor of his teachers. His efforts were unwearied, and his progress very rapid. When he studied fourteen, fifteen, and sometimes sixteen hours a day, we scarcely wonder that he could recite four hundred lines in the Georgies. and sometimes seven hundred at a lesson, or, on a review, one thousand to thirteen hundred in the Æneid. By this diligence he read the whole Greek Testament in five and a half weeks, and prepared for College in seven and a half months. On account of such conscientious devotion, his teachers allowed bin to be hold in the Greater a land and beneficent things; in his Sorier, and fallible guide, teacher and friend; and in the Holy Spirit a sure and mover hing reward for every sincere endower to do the will of God, to improve highly, and fiddle the law of love to his creatures. God graciously led him of all his doubts to a religion whose first expression was, "My relinance is us on the mercy of Stod in Jesus Christ, and not own repontance for sin, which know I have fill for verys; and therefore I have perfect trust and peace."

him to study in his own room, and to recite with others, or by himself, as might be best for his progress.

Such severe application was beyond his strength. But his mind and character developed rapidly amidst the excitements of the Academy, and the influences of the society of Atkinson. He was naturally very diffident, and he entirely broke down in his first attempt at declamation. But this failure, of which he gives an amusing description, roused him to such resolute efforts, that three or four months later, at the public exhibition, he was able to speak in a crowded Church, with complete self-possession. That resolute struggle was a true type of his character. The same diffidence was conquered in society, in his intercourse with young ladies, both in and out of the school, with whom he formed some friendships that ended only with life. When speaking of this year in Atkinson, forty years afterwards, he says, "Never, I believe, have I been able to look back upon a year with a more grateful and satisfied feeling." He left Atkinson with many regrets, taking an affectionate leave of the many friends from whom he had received such marked and uniform kindness, and entered Cambridge after an honorable examination, with "a heart full of gratitude to his parents for their efforts and sacrifices" to gratify his darling wish, and with a determination "to exert every power to prevent any waste of money upon his education; and to secure to them an ultimate reward and satisfaction." His father sent him away with his benediction, and with his earnest instructions to avoid all bad company; closing his advice with these words of wisdom, words then and always faithfully heeded, and beautifully verified: "Keep none but good company, and you will always have good company to keep."

COLLEGE LIFE.

He entered College in July, 1793. His autobiographical sketch gives a minute account of his four years at Cambridge, often presenting details of his daily studies and occupations, together with incidental descriptions of the state of society, the manners and morals of the time, both in the University and the community. In some respects life in College was then especially perilous. He tells us there was literally no society for the students in the town of Cambridge, and that he has no recollection of having entered a single house as a visitor, while an under graduate, and but very few when a tutor, excepting those of the College Officers. Neither the people of the town, nor the instructors, who had families, encouraged any social intercourse with the students, excepting in cases of family connection, or particular acquaintance. There was nothing to refine the tastes and manners, and thus indirectly, yet powerfully, to improve

COLLEGE LIFE.

He entered College in July, 1793. His autobiographical akateh gives a minute account of his four years at Cambridge, often presenting details of his durity studies and occupations, together, with incidental descriptions of the state of secrety, the manners and morals of the time, both in the University and the of secrety, the manners and morals of the time, both in the University and the commonty. In some respects life in College was then expecially perform. He tells us there was literally no society for the sudents in the rawn of Cambridge and that he has no recollection of having entered a single house as a vision while an under graduity, and but very few when a rater, excepting those of the College Officers. Neither the people of the town, nor the instructors, who had families, encouraged any social intercourse with the statements, excepting the cases of family connection, or particular acquaintance. There was nother to refunction the tastes and manners, and thus indirectly, yet powerfully, to improve the moral tone of the students. Meanwhile, positively unfavorable influences were not wanting. The power of the licentious principles of the period of the French Revolution was at its height. Those principles had a great and insiduous attraction for the minds of ardent young men. The custom of using ardent spirits, also, was fearfully prevalent. The punch bowl was held to be indispensable in the social circle, especially among young men. Under such circumstances it was natural that disorderly actions, and disgraceful tumults, should frequently occur among the students. Neither is it strange, though so sad, that, as he states in his Journal, nearly one fourth of every class should have "become sots," "lost to themselves and to the world, in consequence of indulging in the use of intoxicating drinks early in life, and principally in the College itself,"—"a terrible sacrifice," to use his own striking words, "of the intellect, the genius, the literature, the moral and religious principle and feeling of the country."

In all respects he bore the ordeal nobly. Though his religious opinions remained for a long time unsettled, his religious convictions seem to have become clear and fixed during his college days. He clung to the Christian faith: and already, though perhaps unconsciously, a vow of fidelity and consecration had been recorded in his heart. His political views, too, became distinct and settled. He was always loyal to the idea of liberty; but the tendencies and character of his mind were such, that he was utterly disgusted by the excesses and madness of the French people. His whole nature fitted him to be profoundly influenced by the character of Washington; to appreciate his calm wisdom; to recognize the great qualities that made him the model of public and private virtue; and it is scarcely too much to say, that he himself became an embodiment of the spirit of that great administration of liberty combined with order, of genuine patriotism and public virtue, amidst all the political changes which occurred during his long life. His moral integrity was untouched. He took no part in the carousals in which the students frequently indulged. In respect to one in which his class was engaged, he modestly says:

"I recollect feeling glad that I was excusable in the opinion of all for not joining in the scene," (on account of the death of a near relative not long before,). "for otherwise it might have required more of the spirit of independence than the occasion would have called forth in me to refuse joining, however I might have wished to refuse."

That spirit of independence was not wanting when it was demanded. Upon one occasion, when the class were inclined to adopt some high handed measures in respect to an Examination, he sturdily opposed them, although he the moral tone of the sindents. Meanwhile, positively unfavorable inflaes were not wanting. The power of the licentions principles of the period for the Wrench Revolution was at its height. Those principles had a great and siduous attraction for the minds of undent young men. The costem of a ardent spirits, also, was fearfully provident. The punch bowl was held to indispensable in the acid circle, especially among young men. Under circumstances it was natural that 'disorderly actions, and disgraciful than abould frequently occur among the students. Neither is it atrange, though said, that a become sets," alost to themselves and to the world, in consequence indulging in the use of intexicating drinks early in life, and principally in indulging in the use of intexicating drinks early in life, and principally in its college itself,"—"a terrible sacrifice," to use his own striking words, "and intellect the genlas, the literature, the moral and religious principal and interior of the country."

In all respects he bore the ordeal nobly. Though his religious opining remained for a long time unsettled, his religious convictions seem to have come clear and fixed during his college days. He clung to the Christian fail and already, though perhaps unconsciously, a vow of tidelity and consecrate had been recorded in his heart. His political views, too, became distinct settled. He was always loyal to the idea of liberty; but the tendencies contacted of his mind were such, that he was atterly disgusted by the example and madness of the French people. His whole nature litted him to be ploudly influenced by the character of Washington; to appreciate his calm foundly influenced by the character of Washington; to appreciate his calm done; to recognize the great qualities that made him the model of public private virtue; and it is scarcely too much to say, that he himself became embodiment of the spirit of that great administration of liberty combined banges which order, of genuine patriotism and public writes, amidst all the politic changes which occurred during his long life. His moral integrity was touched. He took no part in the enroweds in which the stronged, he modestly as indulged. In respect to one in which his class was engaged, he modestly as indulged. In respect to one in which his class was engaged, he modestly as

That spirit of independence was not marking when it was demanded. I on one occasion, when the class were inclined to adopt some high handed we sures in respect to an Examination, he stardily appeared them, although incurred hisses and insults for his independence; and finally succeeded in defeating their mad and foolish scheme. He was desirous of the approbation of those around him; but if his action involved a principle, his resolution was invincible, and it was impossible to make him consciously untrue.

His whole course in College was highly honorable. He was thoroughly conscientious in his devotion to study. He seems to have excelled in composition. We take the following extract from his diary;

"Carried up new themes, and received corrected those on "Multa petentibus, multa desunt," or Avarice, which brought us sixteen double marks. A double mark, by the way, was two strokes of the pen, under the name of the writer of the theme, indicative of excellence. One line was always drawn under the name, and sometimes no one in the class had more than one. It so happened that whenever there was a double mark on any theme, mine did not escape it. It was a small affair, but of some interest to me at the time."

It was this persistent fidelity alike in little and greater duties, which gave him such a distinguished rank in his class. The requisitions of College studies did not content him. He read extensively in History, and in general Literature, during the regular terms. Vacations also, although partly devoted to social visiting, which he greatly enjoyed, gave constant proof of his love of reading, and his desire for knowledge. We give a memorandum of the general reading of one term, and a part of one vacation:

"Putnam's Life; Franklin's Life and Essays; Haley's Poetical Essay on History; Longinus on the Sublime; Minot's History of the Insurrection; Philosophical Survey of the Animal Creation; Priestley's Lectures on History and General Policy; several of Lady Montagu's Letters; Fitz Osborne's Letters; Montesquieu's Persian Letters, and Pope's Essay on Man."

Locke, Shakespeare, Robertson's Histories, the Spectator, together with other books of the highest order, are frequently named in his notes of his vacation readings.

The only thing to be regretted in his College Course, was his excessive application. Both at Atkinson and at Cambridge, he neglected necessary exercise in the open air, in his devotion to books. This was his besetting sin. At one time, a classmate, Hon. James Richardson of Dedham, sent him a poetical epistle to dissuade him from such excessive study,—a few lines of which are given in his diary. The vigor of his constitution enabled him to bear this severe trial of its strength without entirely breaking down; and he went through the University with only two or three brief periods of siekness, in one of which Channing watched with him, and of whom he speaks as showing all the softness and delicacy of manners that would become a woman in attending upon the sick. But his health became impaired for years, and was almost sacrificed; and it is very interesting to see how careful he always was in letters to his son in later years, and in his advice to others, both young and old, to warn them against a similiar mistake.

But a life so nobly faithful in all other respects, could not fail to be delightful. Passages in his Journal, written at the close of a term, or the beginning of a new College year, give ample proof of his thorough enjoyment of the University. His relations with his classmates were intimate and cordial. They repeatedly honored him by selecting him as their Orator on various occasions. He was chosen to give a eulogy on his classmate, Wellington, who was drowned in Fresh Pond, in the early part of the Senior year. It was given, he says, "in the College Chapel, early in December, before the government and students, and with more heart-feeling than any other College exercise I was ever called to perform." He gave the Valedictory of his class to the Speaking Club — an association for mutual improvement, in which he took a great interest. At the close of his Junior year, he was appointed to give an oration on the Birth-day of Washington, Feb. 22nd, 1796, at the first celebration of the Hasty Pudding Club, of which he was one of the founders, but was prevented from giving it, in consequence of his being at Andover at that time, engaged in teaching school. He was therefore reappointed to give an Anniversary oration before the Club, in the following September. He was the first of his class elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society. He was also chosen to prepare an English oration for the Class Day. Previously to that time. the usual performances had been a Latin Oration and a Poem. He declined this honor, partly, perhaps, because it was an innovation; and as the class were unable to unite upon any one else, that part was omitted. In speaking of his College life, and his relations with his classmates, he says, "The various associations formed among ourselves added to the interest of our individual pursuits." And again, about the time of the formation of the Hasty Pudding Club, he says, "The still increasing intimacy with favorite and beloved classmates, and the new associations formed with them, afforded me the truest enjoyment."

He graduated in 1797, with the highest honors of his class. The assignment of the parts for Commencement called forth feelings which were as honorable to him as his fidelity to College duties. The Class had long awarded the two English Orations to Horace Binney and himself. He believed that Binney had the highest claims; and when the first part was assigned to him, tonding upon the sick. But his health became impaired for years, and was almost succificed; and it is very interesting to see how enrells he always was in letters to his son in laify years, and in his advice to others, both young and old, to warn them against a gimiliar mistales.

He graduated in 1737, with the highest honors of his class. The assign ment of the parts for Commencement called forth feelings which were as hon orable to him as his falelity to College duties. The Class had long nuarder the two English Orations to Horace Sinner and himself. He helieved the Binner had the highest claims; and when the first part was assigned to him.

he did not for some time enjoy the honor, because he felt that it belonged to another. He bears the most generous testimony respecting his rival and friend.

"Binney," he says, "could not but have thought himself entitled to the first honors of the Class, yet he conducted with perfect magnanimity on the occasion, and with great delicacy as respected me, and thereby, in no small measure, enhanced my esteem and affection for him. If he felt that injustice had been done to his claims, he did not impute the fault in any degree to me; for he well knew what my feelings and expectations were, both in respect to him and myself, before the assignment of the parts."

The same generous feeling pervaded all the correspondence of these distinguished men in later years. After Judge White's death, Mr. Binney gave this striking tribute to his beloved classmate. "He never seemed to desire to excel others, like so many young men in College, but only to keep himself up to his own high standard. He had no rivalry. He envied no one, for such a feeling would have marred his victory." Beautiful magnanimity, where each strives to show the other to be worthier than himself, and both alike unconsciously reveal their own nobility.

Mr. Binney's Oration was upon "Enthusiam," and his own upon "The Reign of Prejudice." Exhausted in health, he was scarcely equal to the exertions of Commencement Day; but the excitement of the occasion enabled him to perform his part with his usual felicity and success.

FROM HIS GRADUATION TO HIS ADMISSION TO THE BAR.

The decision in respect to his future profession was difficult. Many things attracted him towards the study of Theology; the prevailing seriousness of his mind, all his tastes, and his deep religious convictions. He seems to have anxiously weighed the question; but he was too conscientious to adopt that profession while his views of religious doctrines remained unsettled. Then, too, many things repelled him from the study of the Law. The drudgery of that profession was positively revolting to him. The same delicacy of conscience which made him scrupulous in respect to Theology, on account of the unsettled state of his opinions, made him fearful lest the duties of the advocate might be sometimes inconsistent with his ideal of integrity, and the chicaneries of practice sully his high sense of honor. The question of right and character held the highest place in all his views of life. But though several years passed before he devoted himself to the study of Law, except at intervals, in the midst of other duties, the actual choice seems to have been early made.

The first two years after leaving College were spent in Medford, where he took charge of the Grammar School, partly for the purpose of obtaining means to discharge his obligations for a portion of the expenses of his education. Glimpses of his inner life, and the tendencies of his feeling and thought at this period, are given in letters to his classmates, and in incidental accounts of his daily occupations. On one occasion, at least, his independence was tested, when he repelled, with the utmost decision, an attempt to interfere with the management of the school, and with his own efforts to secure obedience. He declared himself ready to leave at a moment's notice; but while he remained the instructor of the school, he claimed the unrestricted right to judge of its discipline. His Medford life was very happy. His strong love for society was gratified by constant intercourse with intelligent and appreciating friends. Here, too, he formed a friendship with Rev. Dr. Osgood, which then, and ever afterward, gave him great delight; a friendship which continued with his family, to the latest hour of his own life. But these were also very busy years. He was the same faithful scholar at Medford as at Cambridge. His name had already been entered as a student of Law, and he devoted many hours to direct preparation for that profession. In a letter to his chum and class-mate, Kimball, he gives a picture of his life. The date is Feb. 12th, 1799.

"At five, this morning, your humble servant rose. After devouring about thirty pages of Smith's Wealth of Nations, he took breakfast. Then he waited upon his charming geographical pupil, and also attended to three classes in English Grammar. Then he betook himself to his despotic drudgery over fifty or sixty trembling pupils. At noon he travelled over ten or twelve pages of Tully, with a future son of Harvard; half as many in that entertaining work, the Greek Grammar; and attended to another class in parsing English. Since the afternoon school, he has passed the evening with a number of ladies, with the exception of one hour devoted to a French gentleman resident here, and desirous of my aid in getting a little hold of our language. From this one day's history, you may form an idea of his daily work. Seldom does it now materially differ from this course."

In August, 1799, he returned to Cambridge for the purpose of studying his profession. But he soon after accepted the office of Latin tutor in the University, and continued in that position for almost four years. The duties of this office were most congenial to his tastes. He loved the Classics, especially the Latin writers. In early and later letters, he often speaks with enthusiasm, and critical discrimination, of the peculiar characteristics of different Latin authors. He says of Livy, that "the more he studied, the more he admired him." In another place he writes as follows:

The first two lears after leaving College were spent in Meiford, who took clarge of the Commun richool, partly for the purpose of chains means to discharge his obliquations for a partlen of the expenses of his edge, then. In August, 1793; he returned to Cambridge for the purpose of study in his profession. But he soon after accepted the office of Latin tutor in the University, and continued in that position for almost four years. The dutie of this office were most congental to his tastes. He loved the Classics, especially the Latin writers. In early and later letters, he often speaks with smith sinsue, and critical discrimination, of the peculiar characteristics of different Latin ambors. He says of Livy, that "the more he studied, the more he of mired him." In another place he writes are follows:

"I have sometimes thought Cicero and Virgil superior to all others, in the grace, the elegance, the beautiful simplicity, as well as grandeur of their style and language, and also in the variety, dignity, and excellence of their sentiments. But Horace and Sallust, too, have their peculiar attractions, and attractions which never cloy."

This acquaintance with, and love for Classical Literature, prompted him, soon after he left Cambridge, to join with Mr. John Pickering, in preparing a new edition of Sallust, with notes. The work was performed with the utmost care, and the highest scholarship, and the book was published by Cushing and Appleton, of Salem, in 1805. Unfortunately, almost the whole of the first edition was destroyed by fire, and a second was never published. This love for Classical Literature continued to the end of Judge White's life, and his library contained a valuable collection of both Greek and Latin authors.

During his connection with the College, his best powers were constantly exerted for the reformation of abuses in its general management and instruction. His high rank as a scholar, the purity and force of his character, his continuance in office during a longer period than was customary for the tutors at that time, which enabled him to act more efficiently as a member of the Government, together with his hearty affection for the University, and his untiring interest in its welfare, all combined to make his influence equally strong and beneficent.

Indeed, his attachment to the College was so sincere, that he was reluctant to leave Cambridge, and did not resign his tutorship until he had been strongly solicited to do so on the part of his friends. On the 26th of Aug., 1803, he met the Freshmen, his own "particular class, for the last time, after passing a year of uninterrupted harmony and affection with them." On Sept. 13th, he took "a final farewell of Cambridge, and went in the stage to Salem," where he immediately entered the Law Office of Samuel Putnam, afterwards Judge of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. Mr. Putnam at once opened his house and his heart to his new pupil. Nothing could exceed the affectionate hospitality and the abounding kindness which he always received from the family of his honored instructor, as well as from himself; and it was his delight to recall their unwearied attentions in after years. He was a fellow student with John Pickering. These two young men immediately found themselves congenial spirits, not only in their love of study, in scholarly attainments and tastes, but in their general opinions upon questions out of the realm of literature. The result was a mutual respect, and an ardent friendship, which bound them very closely to each other during the remainder of their lives.

Indeed, his attachment to the College was so smeere, that he was renice tunt to leave Cambridge, and did not resign his tatorship until he had been strongly solicited to do so on the part of his friends. On the 26th of Angal 1803, he met the Freshmen, his own "particular class, for the last time, after passing a year of uninterrupted barmony and affection with them." He was a follow stadent with John Pickering. These two young men immediately found themselves contained apirits, not only in their love of study, in scholarly attainments and tastes, but in their general opinions upon questions out of the realm of literature. The result was a motant respect, and as ardent friendship, which bound them very closely to each other during the remainder of their lives. Found them very closely to each other during the remainder of their lives.

His residence in Salem was very agreeable. He was welcomed into the best society of the town as an additional ornament to circles already so intelligent and attractive. He mentions, in letters to his classmates, the names of many whom he especially enjoyed, and with whom he formed lasting friendships. Amidst such pleasant auspices he remained until the completion of his professional studies, in 1804.

These seven years of preparation since he graduated from College, had been industrious and happy years. His reading was extensive. His study of the Law had been thorough. In addition to old College friendships, which he still kept warm and fresh, he formed many new ones which were valuable and true. In describing his happiness, he says:

"In the constitution of our minds, our hearts, our bodies, what inlet to pleasure is denied us! How pure is the satisfaction which attends the pursuit of truth, and the acquisition of knowledge and science! How sweet is the intercourse with those who have long been dear to us! How pleasant and valuable are those large associations in which we feel a common interest, and by which we are mutually affected, and mutually benefitted!"

Again, in 1803, when speaking of the pleasant circumstances around him, he says, "I have always found it easy to obey the Apostolic injunction, and in whatsoever state I am, to be content, and generally to be satisfied and happy."

We find abundant indications at this period, both of his own high principles of action, and of the confidence which his character had then inspired. Nothing can more conclusively show the impression which he made upon those who knew him, than the unconscious tributes which they paid to his integrity in the most confidential correspondence. No man suggested an unworthy aim, or seemed to suppose him capable of being actuated by any other than the highest motives. One classmate speaks of "the honorable and lofty success." which he predicted for him, and which he was sure would alone "satisfy him or his friends," and says, "You are not materially altered since you left College. You still do what you do with the zeal of passion, and look as loftily as any around you. You despise the first fruits of the Law, which are the only fruits that are within the reach of the grovelling barrister. You are stretching yourself to gather the fruit that hangs on the topmost bough, and you will gather it, unless I have mistaken you." This life-long friend did not mistake him. His cardinal principle was thus expressed by himself, at this very period. "Better to fail in a good cause, than to succeed in bad one" - a principle which he applied to private and public action, to the affairs of individuals and nations, with unwavering lovalty; and which, though it may sometimes lead to apparent failure, will always secure the grandest success.

His residence in Salem was very agreeable. He was welcomed into the beer society of the town as an additional organization to circles already so intelligent and attractive. He mentions, in letters to his classmates, the names a many whom he especially enjoyed, and with whom he formed lasting friendships Amidst such pleasant anaptees he remained until the completion of his professional studies, in 1804.

These seven years of preparation since he graduated from College, had been industrious and happy years. His reading was extensive. His sends of the Law had been thereugh. In addition to old College friendshape, which be still kept warm and frush, he formed many now ones which were valuable and true. In describing his happiness, he says:

"In the constitution of our minds, our hearts, our bodies, what islet to pleasure is denied us! How pure is the satisfaction which attends the pursuit of truth, and the acquisition of knowledge and science! How sweet is the intercourse with those who have long been done to us! How pleasant and valenble are those large associations in which we first a common laterest, and by which we are mutually affected, and mutually benefitted?"

Again, in 1803, when speaking of the pleasant circumstances around bins he says, "I have always found it easy to obey the Agastolic injunction and be whatsoever state I am, to be content, and generally to be satisfied and lappy."

ples of action, and of the confidence which his character had then inspired. Nothing can more conclusively show the impression which he mode against these who knew him, than the unconscious tributes which they paid to his integrity in the most confidential correspondence. No man suggested an augments aim or seemed to suppose him capable of being actuated by any other than the highest motives. One classmate speaks of "the honorable and low encess." which he predicted for him, and which he was sure would almo "artisiv him or his friends," and says, "You are not materially altered since you left College his friends," and says, "You are not materially altered since you left College for still do what you do with the scal of passion, and look as loftly as any around you. You despise the first fruits of the law, which are the only fruits false are within the reach of the grovelling barristor. You are stretching yourself to gather the fruit that hangs on the topmost bound, and this very position it, unless I have mistaken you." This life-lang fruit had not mistake od. "Butter to fail in a good cause, than to moceand in lad one — a priorious which he applied to private and public action, to the admire of individuals and nations, with unwavering loyalty; and which, though it may commitmen lead and nations, with unwavering loyalty; and which, though it may commitmen lead and nations, with unwavering loyalty; and which, though it may commitmen lead on an apparent failure, will always seemed the grandest surcess.

FROM HIS ADMISSION TO THE BAR, TO HIS APPOINTMENT AS JUDGE.

He was admitted an Attorney of the Court of Common Pleas in Salem, June 26th, 1804. He only remained in Salem a few days to enjoy the celebration of the 4th of July, at which his friend John Pickering gave an oration. and to make immediate preparation for his removal to Newburyport. July 16th, he opened a Law office in that place. On the 5th of August, we find him an attendant upon Mr. Popkins' preaching at the old church in Newbury, which he characterizes as excellent, and under whose ministry he continued with constant satisfaction and delight. He was now twenty eight years old, with a high reputation as a man of unusual talents and attainments, as well as a man of established character. His success at the Bar was very decided, and the receipts of his second year of practice amounted to what would then have been considered an ample income. On the 24th of May, 1807, he was married at Concord, to Mrs. Mary Van Schalkwyck, daughter of Dr. Josiah Wilder, of Lancaster, Mass. She was a lady of remarkable attractions and excellence, and his correspondence at that period gives ample proof of the happiness which he found in the home which she adorned for a little more than four years. But her health soon failed; and she died on the 29th of June, 1811, leaving two daughters to be his care, and his consolation, amid his heavy grief.

Mr. White was not only early successful as a lawyer, but he at once attracted the notice and commanded the confidence of the people of the town in other respects. The next year after he went to Newburyport, he gave an address before the Merrimack Humane Society, which was published, and passed through several editions. Its favorable reception was not strange. It was an earnest plea for a life of Christian philanthropy, which struck the key note of his own life, and was written and spoken out of a full heart. He was engaged in every humane and benevolent enterprise. He helped to form the Merrimack Bible Society. He was a trustee of the Dummer Academy. He served as a member of the School Committee. Nothing which promised either to promote the health, to advance the education, or to improve the morals of the town, failed to secure his influence and cooperation. He was careful, meanwhile, not to forego his studious habits. Nov. 1, 1804, we find the following entry in his diary: "Entered on a more extended course of study than of late; Greek after Breakfast; Latin after dinner; some of the Scriptures every day." In one respect, certainly, it was not an unfitting description of his course of study in all periods of his life; for however wide its range might be

In 1810, he was elected to the Senate of the State, and continued a member till 1815. His earnest and fearless devotion to the principles of the Federalists, his dignity and ability as a debater, his attainments as a lawyer, and his high character as a man, made him very prominent in the Senate. He commanded the confidence of his own party to such a degree, that he was selected as their candidate for Congress, at the election in Nov. 1814, and was chosen by an almost unanimous vote of the people of his District. But before he took his seat, the office of Judge of Probate for the County of Essex was tendered to him; and having finally decided to accept it, he resigned his commission as Representative in the Spring of 1815.

This was the turning point in his life. It was singular, certainly, that a man at the age of thirty-nine, who had already attained marked professional and political distinction, and stood so high in the public favor and confidence, should retire both from the Bar, and from public life, when so wide a sphere of service and influence was open to him. He was known beyond the limits of his own State, and was appointed chairman of a Commission to investigate the difficulties which had arisen in the administration of the affairs of Dartmouth College, by the Legislature of New Hampshire, in June, 1815. The "fruit upon the topmost bough" seemed within his grasp. Many of his friends, then, and in later years, greatly regretted the loss of the eminent public services which he was so admirably qualified to render, and which would have brought so much honor to himself, and advantage to the State. His decision was doubtless a mistake in the opinion of men of the world; but it was predetermined by his character and previous life. He was not a man of the world. He recognized the duty of laboring for its highest welfare, and cherished an undying interest in everything which promised to improve or bless it. But he was singularly free from its self-seeking and ambition. In later life, as in College, "he never seemed to desire to excel others, but only to be true to his own high standard." Then, too, the practice of the Law had never been agreeable to him; and a political career must have been still more unattractive. All his tendencies and tastes combined, with his love of literature and of study. to lead him to choose a more retired life.

Events had occurred during his residence in Newburyport, which must have had a great, though perhaps unconscious influence upon his decision. The first was the death of his classmate and chum, Jabez Kimball, in 1805. His friendships were always true and deep, and his relations with Kimball were singularly cordial and affectionate. By frequent interchange of letters, they kept up the same free and unreserved communication of each other's plans, wishes, hopes, which they had enjoyed when they shared the same room at College. They clung to each other in mutual respect, and trust, and love; and Kimball, who had begun the practice of law in New Hampshire, earlier than Mr. White, was extremely desirous to have his friend located in his own immediate neighborhood, that they might be together in the work of life, as they had been in their preparation for it. Very soon after Mr. White went to Newburyport, the disease which had long threatened his friend developed itself in a fatal form, and he returned to Haverhill, his former home, to die among his friends and kindred. Nothing could exceed Mr. White's devotion to him during the last few months of his life. Though it must have been a great detriment to his own prospects so greatly to neglect the office which he had just opened, he divided his time between Haverhill and Newburyport, and watched over his friend till the last beat of his pulse, with an affection as tender as the love of woman. His letters show how deeply he was affected by this parting scene, and how sincerely he mourned his friend's too early loss. Life assumed a new seriousness and sacredness to his mind; and religion not only seemed to give the solution of its mystery, but to present new claims upon his personal reverence and love. And the following brief entry in his Journal, under the date of April 5th, 1807, gains a new and more beautiful significance in this connection: "Full dedication of myself to God. May He preserve my heart in his law and love!"

But the event which touched him still more deeply, was the early death of his wife. If the loss of a classmate so greatly affected him, we can only imagine, rather than describe, the profound impression made upon him by the death of a companion whom he seems to have cherished with an equal respect and love, and the breaking up of that domestic felicity which he was so eminently fitted to heighten and to enjoy. Though he always spoke of her loss with the truest resignation, he could only name it with the deepest grief. Chastened by such deep experiences, so devoted to the children left to his care, it was not strange, with such natural tastes as he possessed, that, after a brief service in public life, he should have turned away from it entirely; and so far as we can learn from letters or diaries, he never had a moment of questioning or regret in respect to his decision.

But if public life had no charm, on the other hand the position which had been offered him possessed positive attractions. While it gave him leisure for literary pursuits, it opened a sphere of practical usefulness whose importance is very seldom appreciated.

At that time there was a peculiar opportunity for a man of eminent ability, and of ample legal attainments, to render a service which was not only very valuable, but indispensable in respect to the modes of conducting Probate business. Loose methods of procedure had crept into the Probate Courts, first adopted, doubtless, for the purpose of facilitating business, but open to serious objections, and liable to great abuse. Judges would sometimes confer with parties out of Court in respect to matters that were to be brought before them for decision, or, when it seemed unimportant, fail to order due notice to persons adversely interested, in respect to the proceedings of the Court. In pure hands, such irregularities might lead to no actual injustice; but they were entirely incompatible with the views of a man like Mr. White, and he accepted the office of Judge with the positive understanding that he should undertake their reformation.

PROBATE SERVICES.

The reformation of abuses, even when generally acknowledged, is seldom effected without discontent and censure. As was to have been expected, the new proceedings produced a temporary dissatisfaction, which neither his eminent ability as a lawyer, nor his unquestioned character as a man, could immediately silence. They involved occasional expenses and delays, which were magnified into grave causes of complaint. Fortunately for Judge White himself, and for the future character of the Probate Courts of the Commonwealth, these complaints finally took a specific form in a memorial presented to the Legislature at its Summer Session in 1821, when a special committee was appointed to institute an inquiry, and present a report.

Judge White bore himself with characteristic dignity during these vexatious proceedings. They were supposed to have been instituted partly on account of former political enmities; but they were made doubly aggravating because they were undertaken immediately after a severe domestic affliction. But he was perfectly assured of the entire propriety of his course. In a letter to his brother-in-law, Samuel Orne, Esq., of Springfield, dated June 6th, 1824, he says:

"You must have seen in the papers notice of a complaint as to the Probate affairs of this County. I hope it did not alarm you. Mr. Merrill procured me a copy of the complaint, of which I had previously no intimation. On

Judge White bore himself with characteristic dignity during these verificus productings. They were supposed to have been instituted partly on account of former political comities; but they were unde doubly againstatus because they were undertaken immediately after a severe doubly affection. But he was perfectly assured of the eatire propriety of his course. In a latter to his inchloring law, Samuel Orne, E.q., of Springfield, dated Jame 10th, 1834, he says:

From must have seen in the papers notice of a complaint as to the Probate affairs of this County. I hope it did not places you. Mr. Merrill procured one a copy of the complaint of which I and previously no intimation. On the face of the complaint, there is not a shadow of reason for the solemn proceedings of the House."

The Committee discharged the duty assigned them, but after examining only such witnesses as were presented by the complainants themselves, they reported that all farther proceedings should be suspended; and this triumphant vindication of his course was made complete by the unanimous adoption of their report by the Legislature. After the close of the proceedings, he writes to Mr. Orne in the following terms:

"The Committee on my Probate affairs have at length reported; and considering that the inquiry was wholly ex parte, and the County ransacked for those who thought themselves aggrieved to pour out their complaints, the report is as favorable as could be expected. This method of investigating the official conduct of a man, by examining witnesses not only prejudiced against him, but incapable of understanding the grounds and motives of his proceeding, and all behind his back, and making up judgment without affording him opportunity even to explain, is as arbitrary as anything of the old English Star Chamber proceedings. To subject one to this ordeal without justifiable cause, and to torture the feelings of his distant friends who cannot have his consciousness of innocence about them, is unjust and cruel. I was urged to go to Boston, and see the Committee; but I could not bring my mind down to it. I saw no one of the Legislature on the subject, and resolved to leave the thing to its own course. Now it is over, I do not regret the investigation. The sanction of the Committee to the utility of the change I adopted in the mode of doing Probate business, will close the mouths of murmurers."

We have said that the formal complaint was fortunate for the future character of the Probate Courts, as well as for Judge White himself. He was never content to leave anything partially accomplished. In another letter to Mr. Orne, dated July 5th, 1821, he says: "As to my Judgeship, if I had never meddled with it I might rejoice; but I feel like seeing it well through now. When everything becomes as it should be, I shall have no objection to quitting it." In accordance with this purpose he immediately began a little work entitled "A view of the Jurisdiction and Proceedings of the Courts of Probate in Massachusetts, with Particular Reference to the County of Essex." As he intended that this book should contain not only a history of former probate proceedings, with a vindication of the reforms which he had introduced, but also be an authoritative treatise in respect to Probate Courts, he bestowed great care upon its preparation, and consulted with his friend, Hon. John Pickering, at every step of his progress. It was printed in a pamphlet of one hundred and forty eight pages, in the early part of the year 1822. Writing to Mr. Orne at the time of its publication, he speaks of it as a work the face of the complaint, there is not a shadow of reason for the solemn proceedings of the House."

The Committee discharged the duty assigned them, but store executing only such witnesses, as were presented by the complainants themselves, they reported that all farther proceedings should be suspended; and this triumphant vindication of his course was made complete by the manimous adoption of their report by the legislature. After the close of the proceedings, he writes the the Course in the following terms:

"The Committee on my Probate addite have at length reported; and contidering that the inquiry was wholly expected to prove out their complaints, the report is as fiverable as could be expected. This method of investigating the port is as fiverable as could be expected. This method of investigating the official conduct of a man, by examining witnesses not only proposition against him, but incapable of understanding the grounds and motives of his proceeding and in highlands and individual affording bits ing and all helpinds his back, and making up padement without affording bits opportunity even to explain, is as arbitrary as anything of the old English Star Chamber proceedings. To subject one to this ordest without justifiable consciousness of innocence about them is adjust and cruel. I was urged to consciousness of innocence about them, is anjust and cruel. We have said that the formal complaint was formance for the infance castactor of the Probate Courts, as well as for Jadge White himself. He was

which he "thought necessary," and adds, "If any one will read it, and not acknowledge the course I pursued was a proper one, I shall at least be indifferent to his opinion upon the subject. Next time I am to be author, I hope to have a more agreeable theme." The public soon acknowledged the propriety of his course without a dissenting voice. His book at once took its place as an authority; and the reforms introduced into the County of Essex by Judge White and Mr. Lord, the faithful Register of Probate, were extensively adopted in other parts of the Commonwealth.

Fortunately also for the Court and County, Judge White did not relinquish his office after everything had "become as it should be," but continued to adorn it until July, 1853, when he resigned, after having held it thirty eight years. We take the following passage from his diary for April 25, 1853:

"This afternoon, I sent my letter of resignation of the office of Judge of Probate, to take effect on the first of July. I sent it sooner than I intended, because I saw mention made of a movement to get recommendations to the office, and I wished that those who might feel some delicacy about doing so before I had actually resigned, might be on an equal footing with others. I believe that no predecessor has held the office longer than I have. My kinsman, John Appleton, held it thirty seven years. Many things I might now do better, but I have always aimed to do right at the time, without fear, favor, or private interest."

His modest claim did no justice to the feeling of the public, and of the profession. It may be justly said that he not only commanded confidence, but admiration in the discharge of his official duties. He had an incorruptible integrity; and he possessed a sterling good sense, a practical wisdom, an admirable balance of mind, together with a thorough knowledge of his own department of Law, so that his decisions seemed to be stamped in the mint of Justice. In his long term of service, he must have been called to adjudicate upon almost every estate in the County; and a great number of orphans and widows felt "the paternal influence of his judicial course." Equally dignified in the fulfilment of, and his retirement from his official functions, he closed his career as a Judge with a degree of approbation for his labors, and veneration for his character, which it is the fortune of only the very few to receive.

REMOVAL TO SALEM. DOMESTIC LIFE.

We resume the order of our narrative. Jan. 3d, 1817, he removed from Newburyport to Salem, a little less than two years after his appointment as which he "thought necessary," and adds "If may one will read it, and sektnowledge the course I pursued was a proper one, I shall at least he indicant to his opinion upon the subject. Next time I am to be suffer, I hap there a more agreeable theme." The public sone acknowledged the proper of his course without a dissenting voice. His hook at once took its place an authority; and the reforms introduced into the County of Erses by the White and Mr. Lord, the faithful Hegister of Probate, were extensively add in other parts of the Commonwealth.

Portunately also for the Court and County, Judge White did not requish his office after everything had "become as it should be," but continues salore it until July, 1853, when he resigned, offer having hold it thirty elyears. We take the following passage from his diary for April 25, 1853;

I sent it somet than I indeed because I saw mention made of a movement to get recommendations to the first, and I wished that those who might feel some delicacy about delica so fore I had actually resigned, might be on an caual feeting with others. REMOVAL TO SALEM. DOMESTIC LIFE

We resume the order of our narrative. Jac. 3d, 1817, he removed fro Newburyport to Salem, a little less than two years after his appointment Judge. Perhaps he was drawn to this place by its social attractions. He had felt their charms when he was a student at law in the office of Judge Putnam, and spoke enthusiastically respecting them in letters to friends and classmates. At the time of his removal from Newburyport, and for many years afterwards, the society of this town comprised a very large number of persons who were eminent for high culture and accomplishments; and in his later diaries he makes allusion to the peculiar richness of Salem in great men, of some of whom, he says, any country might be proud. Delighting in society, as truly as in his books, able to make such large contributions himself to the pleasure of social intercourse, he was welcomed by all persons of genius and learning in the town.

In 1819, on the first of August, he was married a second time to Mrs. Eliza Wetmore, only daughter of William Orne, Esq., of Salem, and removed to the house in Court, now Washington St., formerly occupied by Mr. Orne, and in which he resided during the remainder of his life. Possessed now of ample means, blessed with the companionship of a wife whose uncommon intelligence and loveliness of character commanded universal respect, with leisure for the gratification of literary tastes in society and among his books, everything seemed to contribute to enhance his happiness. We have a glimpse of his home life at that time, in a letter to Mr. Orne, a brother of his wife.

"We three,"—referring also to an Aunt of Mrs. White, whom he calls "a great comforter," whose "presence alone gives a deeper consciousness of a protecting Providence,"—"we three enjoy much of true domestic comfort, of genuine fireside enjoyment. The pleasures of reading fill up most of the evening, the day being generally broken up by calls of one sort or another. In the way of reading, we have gone back to Goldsmith, and been delighted with his novels and plays, and are now with the Citizen of the World. We have also taken up Hall's Loo Choo Islands—a late work and very interesting."

It was an intelligent, cultivated, and Christian home, which presented many such bright pictures of fireside joy; a home which, though often graced by the honored guests who were welcomed to it with most generous hospitality, still derived its peculiar charm from the loving presence which gave it constant attraction, and filled it with delight.

But Judge White's domestic life was destined to be again quickly shrouded. His wife's health, which had never been strong, soon failed; and she died March 27th, 1821, soon after the birth of a son. Her early death, at the age

In 1819, on the first of August, he was married a second time to Mrs. Eliza Wetmore, only daughter of William Orne, Esq. of Salem, and removed to the house in Court, now Washington St., formerly occupied by Mr. Orne, and in which he resided during the remainder of his life. Possessed now of ample means, blessed with the companionship of a wife whose succommon intelligence and loveliness of character commonded noiversal respect, with leisure for the gratification of literary testics in society and among his books, weary thing seemed to contribute to enhance his happiness. We have a glimper of his home life at that time, in a letter to Mr. Orne, a brother of his wife.

"We three,"—referring also to an Aust of Mrs. White, whom he calls a great comforter," whose "presence alone gives a deeper constantes of a protecting Providence,"—"we three enjoy much of true demestic comfort, of genuine fireside enjoyment. The pleasures of reading fill up must of the evening, the day being generally broken up by calls of one sort or another. In the way of reading, we have gone back to Goldsmith, and been delighted with his novels and plays, and are now with the Citizen of the World. We have also taken up Hall's Loo Choo Islands—a late work and very interesting."

It was no intelligent, cultivated, and Christian home, which presented many such bright pictures of fireside Joy; a home which, though often grand by the honored guests who were velcomed to it with most generous hospitality, still derived its peculiar charm from the loving presents which gave it constant attraction, and filled it with delicht.

But Judge White's despestic life was destined to be again quickly shrouted. His wife's health, which had nover been strong, soon failed; and she died black 27th, 1821, soon after the birth of a son. Her early death, at the agr of thirty six, in the language of one of the notices of her character, "called forth such general and spontaneous expressions of respect and condolence, as are rarely produced by the death of any individual in the private walks of life;" and the many tributes offered to her memory, give ample proof that she had indeed endeared herself to many, "as a faithful friend, a judicious adviser, and affectionate counsellor, retired and unobtrusive, yet unwearied in rendering the kindest offices of friendship, and in performing the holiest deeds of charity." Thus only one year and eight months after his marriage, he was left a second time, stricken with the deepest grief, with the care of an infant child. This became his chief solace under his heavy sorrow, and he often speaks in his letters of the joy of his constant watchfulness over this beloved boy and his other children, and of witnessing the promise of their health and life.

For nearly three years after his wife's death, a favorite niece presided over his house, who was afterwards married to Rev. Dr. Peabody of Springfield. On the 22nd of January, 1824, he was again married to Mrs. Ruth Rogers, a daughter of Joseph Hurd, Esq., of Charlestown. By this union, which continued more than thirty seven years, and was only broken by his own death, he had three sons. Two of them died in infancy; and one, the eldest, Henry Orne White, a graduate of Harvard, in the class of 1843, is now established as a physician at Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin. In his new domestic relations, so admirably fitted to secure his happiness, the time which was not absorbed by his Probate duties was chiefly given to reading and study, and to attempts in various ways to promote the intelligence and welfare of the community. He began to accumulate books at a very early period. Two of the classes to whom he had been tutor in College, gave him very valuable works. Soon after he went to Newburyport, he mentions repeated purchases which he had made at book auctions there. He continued to collect not only the old standard works in every department of Literature, but also new books of merit, as they came from the Press, until at length, although he had given many thousands of volumes to individuals and associations, his library became very large. It was rich in various departments. His fondness for the Classics led him to collect the best editions of the Greek and Latin authors. Valuable works of History, of Poetry, of Theology, found their place upon his shelves. He was seldom absent from home, except for brief journeys, in one of which he had the good fortune to pass two or three days with his friend Rev. Dr. Channing, at Niagara Falls. While there he visited the battle-field of Lundy's Lane, in company with him and Gen. Scott, and had all the interesting localities pointed out by one who took so distinguished a part in the brilliant military operations in that immediate neighborhood. With ample leisure to gratify his literary tastes, he was able to keep himself, in a remarkable degree, abreast of the world's intellectual life. He had his favorite branches of study. He was a lover of History. He was especially interested in Ecclesiastical affairs. Theology had great attractions for him as a Science. He was not only a faithful reader, but a careful student of the Scriptures. A translation of the Epistle to the Romans was found among his papers. His journal, in which he makes constant mention of the books which he was reading from time to time, and gives brief commendations or criticisms respecting them, affords abundant proof of the purity of his tastes, and of the wide range and great fidelity of his studies and inquiries.

Of other aspects of Judge White's domestic life, it is difficult to speak in fitting terms. No man could have held more sacred the relations to his home and children, or more faithfully endeavored to fulfil them. Perhaps the fact that he had been twice left with the care of children in their infancy, and thus felt himself called by Providence itself to undertake a mother's as well as a father's office, made him unusually thoughtful and careful respecting their training and education. Still this was in his nature, and would have manifested itself under any circumstances. But his theories upon the subject were most judicious. He believed in obedience; but though this was indispensable, he aimed to secure it by gaining the implicit confidence, and the affections of his children, rather than by positive constraint. He was careful not to interfere with nature. He desired to be to them as an invigorating atmosphere, or as the life-giving light, to call forth every nobler and generous trait of character, while unworthy traits and feelings were silently, but persistently repressed and eradicated, rather than to attempt to mould their lives by an excess of discipline; so that they might become what God intended to make them, instead of what he might try to make them himself according to his sincere, but possibly mistaken fancy. Then, too, the deepest thing in his nature was his affection; and though none of those who loved him most, knew, or could imagine the depth of his love, still it made itself continually felt in the nearer relationships of his life, and was refreshing as the dews in his intercourse with his children.

His letters to his eldest son, Rev. William O. White, of Keene, beginning with his first absence from home, and continued to his own latest days, numbering more than six hundred, are most charming specimens of the correspondence of a father with a child. During his son's College days and preparation for professional life, they are filled with admirable hints respecting the true methods of study, and the true aims of life, with out-pourings of the wealth of his learning and affection. Occasionally maxims of wisdom drop unconsciously from his loving pen. Once, for example, in a letter that seems to have been called forth by some pecuniary loss, he says, "If we have competency we should not only be thankful, but cheerfully enjoy it, and never suffer the loss of any portion of property to annoy us, and diminish our enjoyment of the residue. We should never forget that property is good for nothing if not enjoyed in some way, and worse than nothing, if allowed to annoy us by its flight." It would be difficult to find a correspondence that is more unaffected and simple, and yet more truly instructive in its comments upon books and literary questions, as well as upon public affairs, and more entirely instinct with the highest principles, and the most profoundly religious spirit. Happy the son upon whom has been showered such treasures of memory and love.

His letters to his eldest son, Roy. William O. White, of Keene, beginning with his first absence from home, and continued to his own latest days, num-

We forbear to tread farther upon ground so sacred. But Judge White's love of study, though a life-long passion, and his affectionate fidelity to his children, only present particular phases of his character. He had the warmest social sympathies, and he delighted in the interchange of thought and sentiment with living minds. It was his fortune to enjoy an extensive acquaintance with many of the leading men of Massachusetts, and of New England. He esteemed this as one of the great privileges of his life, and it gave him the highest pleasure to welcome them under his own roof. Every man distinguished in any department of study, who visited the city, was drawn towards him as by a magnet. His hospitality was entirely unostentatious, but absolutely generous and free. If his house continually presented fireside pictures of the family circle, engaged in reading new or standard books, it almost as frequently witnessed the gathering of intellectual friends, and of strangers whom he wished to greet and honor, around his cheerful table. Almost every clergyman, who transiently supplied the pulpit of the church in which he worshipped. received his hospitalities. To its stated minister, his house was another home. No man's hospitality could have been more constant or attractive; and certainly very few private dwellings, in the same period, welcomed a greater number of intellectual and professional guests than his, during the last forty years of his life.

MR. RANTOUL'S CONNEXION WITH MILITARY AND LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

My connexion with the Military deserves some notice, inasmuch as it was so interesting to me for a time, and then lost all my regard and interest. When I first came to Beverly, I trained with the standing militia company, comprising the inhabitants from the Meeting-house to Manchester, and including Montserat. There were then three companies in the town, and with the one Company of Manchester, they composed the 3d Regiment of the 1st Brigade of the 2nd Division. The Militia then consisted of every free, white, male citizen between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, with a few exceptions. After this, for one year, I was appointed, by the Selectmen of the town, without my request, to be an engine-man. Although not much gratified with this appointment, as I loved to train, I served at the Engine and was therefore exempted, for one year, from military duty.

In the Autumn of 1800, there was a movement amongst the young men, for the formation of a company of Light Infantry, and I engaged in the movement. The persons who had previously expressed in writing their desire to join in this undertaking, met at the Town (now Briscoe) Hall, on the 17th October, 1800. Dr. Josiah Batchelder, afterward of Falmouth, Maine, was chosen Moderator, and proceeded to select for officers, Jonathan H. Lovett, Captain, Robert Rantoul, Lieutenant, Benjamin Winn, Ensign, and William H. Lovett, Clerk. * * * The legal establishment of the company could then only be procured by special act of the General Court. We petitioned for such establishment, at the next Session of the Legislature, and the matter was the command of the company upon me, and, finally acted upon in the January session of 1801, when an act was passed authorizing Col. James Burnham to enlist a Volunteer Light Infantry Company, and he, on the 2nd of June, 1801, issued an order to me, (J. H. Lovett being absent at sea: this was frequently the case, and for most of the time, gave me the command of the company) to make the enlistment. I accordingly did so, and procured forty signers. [Here follows a list of members of the company, eighty four in all, who had been connected with it before 1809, about which time the company was disbanded. I omit the list because it is, no doubt, matter of record elsewhere. R. S. R.]

May 12th, 1803, I was appointed a member of a Court Martial, to sit in Salem. Court consisted of thirteen members. Major William Prescott, the distinguished lawyer, who recently died in Boston at an advanced age, was President of the Court: John Prince, afterwards Clerk of the Courts (died Sept. 22nd, 1848, aged 66,) was Marshal, and William Wetmore, a lawyer in Salem, whose widow married Judge Daniel A. White, was Judge Advocate. A guard composed of members of the Salem Cadets, attended at the door of the Court House, posting their sentinels according to Military etiquette. The Court was appointed to sit on Wednesday, the 1st day of June, 1803, and sat through that week and one or more days of the next, and, all this time, parade and expense were incurred to ascertain whether a poor, ignorant militia captain had been guilty of a charge, which might as well have been tried in a Justice's Court in half a day. He was found guilty and dismissed from office. * * *

June 10, 1805, Jonathan H. Lovett was chosen Major of the Regiment, which devolved MILITARY AND LEGISLATIVE MALITARY AND LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

On Thursday the 9th of June, 1814, a barge, from a British Ship of War, pursued a schooner, belonging to Manchester, towards this harbor. She, being unable to escape, was run on shore at Mingoe's Beach, where the British set fire to her and left her, when the inhabitants assembled and extinguished the fire. The number of persons associated was fifty four. We turned out twice on alarms that the British were landing, which proved to be groundless, and met frequently for practice until February 13, 1815, when information was received in this town that a treaty of peace had been signed at Ghent on the 24th of December, 1814. In the afternoon of the day of the receipt of this news, the company assembled, and dragging the cannon to the Watch House Hill near Hale Street, fired a salute of 18 guns, under my command, Captain Thorndike being out of town. ciation was soon afterwards dissolved, and the cannon and apparatus were returned to the State Arsenal.

October 16, 1855, I attended a celebration of the 41st anniversary of the present Beverly Light Infantry Company. There are now living in Beverly, seventeen persons beside myself, who were members of the company while, or at some time while I belonged to it. Notwithstanding the apparent inconsistency with my present views of military affairs, I tho't it would be pleasant, and would be attended with many interesting recollections, to meet with my old companions in arms once more. The whole number of members who belonged to the company, during any part of the period of my connexion with it, between April 1801 and Nov. 25, 1809, was eighty four. Thirteen of my old associates attended this celebration, viz: Samuel Stickney, who was Ensign for most of the time while I belonged to the company, now 84 years of age, Edward Stone, Bartholomew Wallis, Ebenezer Trask, Thomas Adams, Samuel Morse Thissel, William Lamson, Francis Lamson, Thomas Whittridge, John P. Webber, Seth Dodge, Thomas Pickard and Robert Carey. About half of these are upwards of seventy years of age.

In 1809, I was chosen a representative to the General Court, with Thomas Davis, Abner Chapman, Thomas Stephens, and Isaac Rea, the last survivor of whom, Abner Chapman, died Oct. 1855, at the age of 85. At that time the town sent its full representation, but, as the attendance of the members was paid for out of the Town Treasury, it was understood that the members should not attend constantly, and I, being the youngest of the delegation, was expected to give place to my seniors, so that for the first year I attended only for a portion of each session, lest the town should be unduly burthened. I was reelected from year to year until 1820, when I was chosen Senator for the County and was re-elected to that office for the years 1821 and 1822.

In 1823, I was a candidate for the Senate. but the election of Senators going against the Federal party in this County, I was, in the same year, chosen Representative and re-elected to that office until 1827, when I lost my election, but not on political grounds. I had voted, in the preceding session, for a free bridge from Charlestown to Boston and had, in . my office of Commissioner of Highways, aided in the laying out of a new piece of road from Cabot to Water Street in Beverly. These, with other grounds of opposition not specifically stated, prevailed for that year, and in 1828, and for the succeeding five years, I was chosen again. For the next six years I was an unsuccessful candidate, and in 1840, I addressed the following letter to a public meeting of the Democratic Party held at the Town Hall:

Beverly, September 22, 1840. Capt. Josian Lovett, 2nd.

DEAR SIR:

The recent alteration of the constitution of this State, renders it necessary to reduce the number of Representatives from Beverly. This circumstance, in connexion with others, having drawn my attention to the relation in which I have stood to the Electors of this town for the space of thirty one years last past, I beg leave to address you, as the chairman of the Town Democratic Committee, upon the subject of withdrawing myself from the consideration of my fellow-citizens, as a candidate for the State Legislature. I was first elected a Representative in 1809, a time of great political excitement. The election occured in May following the raising of the long embargo, which was removed in March, 1809. This measure of the National Government intion was roon afterwards dissolved, and the annou and apparatus were returned to the state Arsenal.

In 1800, I was chosen a representative to the General Court, with Thomas Davis, Abmer Cimpman, Thomas Stephens, and Leave Rea, the last serviver of whom, Abner Chapman, died Oct. 1855, at the age of Sc. At that time the town sent its full representation, but, as the attendance of the members was but, as the attendance of the members was develored that the members should not attend develored that the members should not attend delegation, was expected to give younger of the seniors, as that for the first year I attended only for a portion of each western, less the town should be unduly hardioned. I was objected from year to year until 1820, when was chosen Senator for the Guenty and a re-elected to that office for the years 1821 at 1822.

In 1828, I was a candidate for the Security to please of the pleation of Senators going against the releval party in this County, I was, in a summy say, allowed Representative and re-clear from that office until 1827, when I leat my allowed until 1827, when I leat my allowed in the preceding service, for a faringe from Charlestown to Heston, for a faringe from Charlestown to Heston and he in my affice of Commissioner, of Highwaldidd in the laying out of a new passe of refresh in the laying out of a new passe of refresh that year, a pecifically stated, prevailed for that year, a pecifically stated, prevailed for that year, a 1828, and for the successful explaint, and in 184 ms of manuscential exactions of the following letter to a paid and addressed the Democratic larry poid at 185 meeting of the Democratic larry poid at 185 meeting of the Democratic larry poid at 181 meeting of the Policy of the 181 meeting of 181 me

The recent alteration of this State, renders is necessity reduce the number of lipprocessed from Beverly. This circumstance, in carion with others, having drawn my attaction to the relation in which I have stood the flectors of this town for the space thirty one years last past. I have the space thirty one years last past. I have the Techniques you, as the chairman of the Techniques to the constituent of my independent for my independent for the stood of any fallow-dilipped. business of the town and had produced a state of irritability unexampled within the period of my recollection. Partaking strongly of the popular feeling, as most young men do under similar circumstances, I was elected as an active partizan in the Federal Party. To that party I gave a hearty support, considering their course, in the main, as preferable to that of their opponents, but differing from the leading Federalists on several important points, and continued to be elected from 1809 to 1819 inclusive. In 1820, 1821 and 1822, I was elected, by the support of the Federal party, a Senator for the County of Essex, and was held up as a canditate for the same office in 1823, but the Federal party losing its ascendency, both in the County and the State, for that year, I failed of an election. I was however sent by the town, the same year, to the House of Representatives, and continued to be returned as a Representative from that year until 1827. In 1825, after the decease of Governor Eustis, who died in the first part of that year, an amalgamation of the two great political parties, Federal and Democratic, was brought Legislature then in session. I co-operated in the formation of this new party, in which some of the principles of Federalism were kept out of sight, and a union formed in support of the administration of President John Quincy Adams. At the formation of this party, I objected publicly to what was falsely called the American System, the leading principles of which I uniformly repudiated. With the National Republican Party, as the new organization was called, I felt but little cordiality. It soon became evident that the foundation of the wealth of some of the

had operated with peculiar severity upon the views I now entertain are the opposite of those I held formerly, and that upon the constitutionality and expediency of a National Bank, I have changed my opinion. I once believed that a National Bank would afford great facilities to the government in collecting and disbursing its revenues; that it would be very beneficial to the trading portion of the community, in equalizing exchanges; that it would be a convenience to almost the entire community in facilitating remittances to every part of our extended territory, and that it would restrain and regulate the action of the State Banks. Constitutional objections were obviated by its apparent utility in the arrangements of the financial concerns of the government. In most of these particulars the Bank has failed. But admitting that all the expected benefits have been derived from its existence, they certainly have been most dearly purchased. The dangerous power and influence of the Bank, in controlling elections, through a corrupt press, by the use of its funds in loans or in payment for services rendered; its means of embarrassing the Government in any and every measure not identical with its interests: about through the agency of members of the its means of influence in Congress through loans to members, or enormous fees paid ostensibly for professional services; its means of influence among merchants and traders by granting or witholding loans of money from political considerations, all these combine to satisfy me that such an institution ought not to be tolerated in this free country. Our free institutions ought not to be put at hazard for any pecuniary advantages, any convenience of arrangement, any special accommodation which might be expected to result.

ness of mankind. But though property is necessary, yet in its excess, it is the great malady of civil society. The power of the wealthy is consolidated by their tendency to combination. From this, numbers, dispersion, indigence and ignorance equally preclude the poor. This tendency to combination is fostered by the creation of artificial corporate bodies by the government. In no country has the creation of private corporations been so rapid as in our own, and in none is there a louder call to awaken the watchful jealousy of the friends of liberty and equality.

In 1826, the most exciting subject of consideration in the State Legislature, was the granting of permission to erect a bridge free to all, over Charles River, between Boston and Charlestown. This question had been agitated for several years before, but without a definite result, and I had committed myself, both in the Senate and in the House, in favor of the right of the Legislature and of its duty also, under certain circumstances, to grant authority for the construction of such a bridge. In the Winter session of 1826, a bill was passed granting the free bridge. This bill was, however, vetoed by Governor Lincoln and returned to the House with his objections, March 10th, 1827. It again passed the House by a vote of 99 to 45, more than the constitutional majority of two thirds, and was sent to the Senate and there again put upon its passage and lost, the vote standing 16 for and 12 against it. My vote was given in favor of this bill through all its stages. Thus I incurred the displeasure of some of the wealthiest men in the State, who were peculiarly sensitive at that time in regard to vested rights and the immunity of private corporations from Legislative interference without their consent. In 1827, I was again a candidate for Representative of the Town, and for the first time, after a service of eighteen successive years, failed of a majority. Whether this result was occasioned by my vote on the Bridge question or any other act of my public or private life, or omission of duty on my part, or whether it was simply from the North to the East River. At the

because the electors preferred another to me, are questions which I neither had nor have a right to ask. In 1828, (the Bridge question being settled,) I was again chosen a Representative by a small majority and continued to be re-elected, with more or less opposition, until 1833. In that year resolutions were introduced into the House, in favor of continuing the high tariff of impost These resolutions I considered it my duty to oppose. Before the elections for 1834, I avowed publicly my predilection for the prominent measures of President Jackson's administration and elected to join the Democratic Party in its support. For the next six years, I was an unsuccessful candidate for Representative, indebted solely to that party for support.

The particularity of the foregoing statement, without noticing numerous other instances in which they bestowed upon me their suffrages for various offices and trusts, shews how much I am indebted to the partiality of my fellow-townsmen, and demands of me an expression of the grateful sense which I entertain of their continued favor. Various circumstances now indicate to me the propriety of declining their suffrages at the ensuing election of Representatives. -

In 1818, 1831, and 1832, I was the only Representative from the town.

I was appointed in 1819, on a Committee with Daniel Noble and William W. Parrot to examine the Agricultural Bank at Pittsfield. I left home in April, 1819, and returned May 7th. After I had finished the business on which I went to Pittsfield, I took the stage for Albany, and there went on board a steamer in the forenoon to go down the Hudson River to the City of New York. was the first steamer that I had sailed in. I engaged a passage and then walked about the city until the time of departure, when I went on board and proceeding through Long Island Sound, stopped at New Haven at about nine o'clock in the evening to land and take in passengers, and arrived at New London early in the morning of the next day, I immediately took the stage for Boston and arrived at about eleven o'clock at night at William Smith's boarding house in Hanover St., and the next day went home in the stage. When I awoke in the morning at William Smith's house, I found in my chamber what has since been called Dr. Channing's Baltimore sermon. It was delivered at the ordination of Jared Sparks. I was so much interested in it that I read it entirely through before I left my chamber for breakfast. This seemed to me to be the first open, decided exposition of the ground upon which the liberal party then stood.

In 1821 and in 1831, I was a member of the valuation committee which sat during the recess of the Legislature.

Such, at some periods, has been the lack of political excitement in Beverly, that, in 1815, the whole number of votes cast for Representatives to the General Court was twenty three. Again, in 1818, the town voted to choose but one Representative. Eighteen votes were cast and there was no choice. At a second trial. Robert Rantoul had eleven out of the fifteen votes cast. The largest number of members returned to Thorndike, who then resided principally in the House of Representatives was in 1812, Boston, but made his house in Beverly his when there were seven hundred and forty summer residence, invited the President to seven chosen and it was calculated that there stop there and breakfast. great parties having been ascertained, the attendance of members rapidly declined. The expectation that the Towns would have to pay for their attendance, seemed to most of the members to be a good reason for shortening their stay in Boston.

In 1811, when Mr. Gerry was Governor, the Legislature made a new division of the Congressional Districts. An absurd and singular arrangement of the towns in Essex County, with Chelsea in the County of Suffolk, was made to compose a district. Major Benjamin Russell, who published and edited the leading Federalist paper, the Columbian Centinel, designated on a map by a peculiar coloring, the towns thus selected and hung the map on the wall of his editorial closet. One day Gilbert Stuart locked at the map and saw that the towns, which Russell had thus distinguished, formed a picture resembling some monstrous animal. He took a pencil and with a few touches added what might pass for claws. "There," said Stuart, "that will do for a Salamander," Russel, who was busy with his pen, looked up at the monster and exclaimed "Salamander! Call it Gerrymander!" The word became a proverb, and, for many years, was in popular use among the Federalists as a stigma upon the Democratic Legislature of 1811.

In 1817, James Munroe, who had succeeded James Madison as President of the United States, made the tour of the Eastern States in the Summer of that year. Israel would leave in about two hours for New London. I congaged a passage and then walked about the city until the time of departure, when I went on board and processing through Long Island Sound, stopped at New Haren at about nine o'clock in the evening to land and take in passengers, and arrived at New London early in the norming of the next day, arrived at about cloven o'clock at algebt at immediately took the stage for llosten and William Smith's boarding house in tlanover St., and the next day went home in the stage. In 1817, James Minarce who had succeeded James Madison as President of the Unired States, made the tour of the Source and other towns in the vicinity ware invited.

Nathan Dane, who had been acquainted with Mr. Munroe while in Congress, made a short address of welcome to him. I was intro. duced to him and breakfasted with him. ter the outrageous violence of party spirit, which had prevailed through the administrations of John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison, this period was called the "Era of good feeling." The Federal party saw that it was vain to prosecute their views! of power in the violent manner in which they had at first struggled to maintain pre-eminence, and for the last sixteen years to regain it. They now endeavoured to conciliate their opponents. The principal merchants and other leading Federalists in Boston and other large places in New England, vied with each other in their polite and generous reception of the President upon this occasion. Symptoms of dissolution of the Federal party were apparent at this time, and it was soon lost in the formation of the National Republican party by a partial amalgamation with the Democrats. I think that party spirit has never been more bitter than it was from the commencement of John Adams's administration to the close of James Madison's, a period of twenty years during which I steadfastly adhered to the Federal party. Israel Thorndike, also a Federalist, was as violent a partizan, previous to the accession of Munroe, as any to be found in this part of the country, yet he was among the most forward in his attentions to Mr. Munroe in Boston and in this town. I do not recollect that the President received any particular attention in Salem. The people here greeted him with cheers.

On an occasion previous to this, in 1809, Mr. Thorndike opened his house for the public reception of Governor Christopher Gore, who made a tour from Boston to Maine with much parade. I was introduced to Governor Gore at Mr. Thorndike's house, in company with the other officers of the Militia in Military dress with swords. There was ringing of bells, firing of guns and huzzaing. Governor Gore lost his election the next year and probably the ostentation manifested on this tour, was one of the causes which led to his failure. It was something more than was thought becoming in a Republican Governor, and was commented upon with great severity, and sometimes ridiculed, exaggerated and misrepresented by the Democratic newspapers.

The Columbian Centinel ceased its opposition to the administration of the United States Government, on the accession of Mr. Munroe. It was with Benjamin Russell that the phrase "Era of good feeling" originated, and he acted up to its spirit. His paper, which had been so vituperative and so exclusively opposed as never to utter a sentence in commendation of the Democratic Administrations, now ceased to find fault, and during the eight years of Munroe's presidency was free from all censure of that administration. Major Russell did not cease to be a Federalist until the last moments of the party. He then became a National Republican and then a Whig. died, Jan'y 4, 1845, in the eighty fourth year of his age. The court of impeachment, consisting of the Senate, four members being absent, was organized, and opened from day to day with much formality and ceremony. Saml. Hoar, Junr., George Blake, Daniel Webster and Saml. Hubbard appeared as counsel for Prescott. William Prescott and Augustus Peabody were also of counsel for the Respondent.

The Managers on the part of the House of Representatives, were John Glen King, Chairman, Levi Lincoln, William Baylies, Warren Dutton, Sam'l P. P. Fay, Lemuel Shaw, and Sherman Leland. In the course of the proceedings, Horatio G. Newcomb and Francis C. Gray were substituted for Lincoln and Baylies. Mr. King made the opening argument for the prosecution. Fifteen articles of Impeachment were exhibited by the Committee of the House and read. Six Senators voted "not guilty" on all these articles. The President of the Senate had but one opportunity to vote, and that was on the Second Article, when it appeared that thirteen Senators voted "guilty," and twelve "not guilty." The President voted "not guilty" and thus made a tie. It was generally understood that, if his vote was called for, he would give it in favor of acquittal on every charge. sult astonished me, because it appeared so clear to my mind, that the charges on which I voted "guilty" were proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and if proved, I did not perceive how they could be considered otherwise, than as misconduct and male-feasance in office. It was a striking instance of the different impression made upon different minds by the same evidence. It was a time of no great political excitement, but great party excitement had so lately preceded it, that persons then in publie life could hardly be considered as wholly divested of its influence. Prescott was a strong Federalist, and had the friendship of the principal men in Boston and the leading lawyers. All the Suffolk Senators were for acquittal on all the charges. Two lawyers from the Country, voted to acquit on all, and two others for condemning on one article only. These were all Federalists. Of the Democrats, two voted to condemn on eleven articles, two on ten, one on nine, one on seven, and one on six, and this comprised the whole number of Democrats. Several articles were abandoned by the prosecution, as not sustained by the evidence. There was a unanimous vote of acquittal on three of the articles, and but one vote for conviction on a fourth. Upon the whole, I am of opinion that the method of proceeding by impeachment, from one branch and trial by another branch of the Legislature, does not afford that protection against misconduct in office, which was expected by the Framers of our State and United States Constitutions. It is impracticable to exclude the undue influence of party prejudice upon the minds of men actively engaged in party politics at the time. Jacob Kuhn, messenger of the General Court, was appointed Crier, and Sam'l F. McCleary, Clerk. George Blake for the defence, spoke about six hours, and Daniel Webster about the same length of time.

It was probably through the influence resulting from this trial upon the public mind, that from the first day of May, 1824, all fees were abolished in the Probate Court. and salaries were substituted, for the Judges and Registers of Probate. In the House of Representatives, I took an active and I think an influential part in bringing about this change which in this county has given so much satisfaction. The fees demanded had become an occasion of great complaint and sometimes of altercation between the Register and persons doing business in the Court.

August 31st, 1824, General Lafayette visited this town. A committee of arrangements was constituted to prepare for his reception. This committee invited me to make an address to him. He was so situaat Ipswich, that he could not alight here;

I stood in the water with my hat under my arm, and read the address I had prepared, to which he made a reply, but his foreign accent, the excitement of the occasion, and my perturbation prevented me from fully understanding it. This being accomplished, the cavalcade moved on for lpswich, amidst the cheers of those assembled around the Bank, and the pelting of a drenching rain. A copy of the Address and an account of the other proceedings on this occasion may be found in Stone's History of Beverly. Peter Jowder lost an arm by the firing of cannon on Ellingwood's Point while Lafayette was entering town by Essex Bridge. The General Court at its ensuing session voted him a pension of $50. per year from the Treasury of the Commonwealth. And on the 17th of June, 1825, I, then being a member of the House of Representatives, followed General Lafayette to Bunker's Hill where he assisted at the laying of the corner stone of the monument.

We receive you not merely as the friend of our beloved country, but as the friend of Man. Your labors, your sacrifices, your sufferings in the cause of liberty, demand our gratitude. Accept our sincere congratulations that you live to witness the order, the prosperity, the happiness that result from our free institutions; and may the evening of your days be solaced with the reflection that those principles of government, to the support of which your life has been devoted, and which alone can secure the enjoyment of rational liberty. are fast spreading their influence through the whole family of man. Wishing you long life and uninterrupted happiness, we bid you farewell."

At a town meeting, held October 16, 1820, I was chosen a delegate to the convention for amending the Constitution of Massachusetts, which was to meet on the third Wednesday in November of that year. Four delegates were chosen, to wit: Nathan Dane, Robert Rantoul, Rev. Nathaniel W. Williams, and Deacon John Low. The whole number of votes was sixty-four. There were twelve persons voted for: those chosen had from 52 to 55 votes each. Nathan Dane did not attend the Convention on account of deafness. The other three attended constantly. Williams and Low were especially anxious to obtain an alteration of the third article of the Bill of Rights which relates to the support of public worship. The latter was strongly impressed by what he had experienced in the division of the First Parish in this town, as was the former by what he called the oppression of the Baptists, of which denomination he was a minister. The Convention sat from Nov. 15, 1820, to Jan'y 9, 1821. At a town meeting in Beverly, held previously to that on the 16th of October, the vote on the question "Is it expedient that a Convention be held?" stood 14 in favor of a Convention and 18 against it.

About five hundred members of the Convention were chosen, but they were not all present at any one time. It comprised probably more ability than was ever before assembled in the State. Every principle in the Constitution was fully discussed by the ablest men. There seemed to be a prevailing disposition to endeavor to improve, as well as alter the Constitution. There was a conservative party and a radical party; the first composed mostly of Federalists, the last mostly of Democrats. There were some six or seven Democrats among the Boston delegation, and about thirty Federalists. There were several clergymen and others who would not choose to be ranked with any political party. Most of the towns that sent more than one delegate, chose a portion from each party, so that, while the Federal Party had a large majority, there was a fair representation of the Democratic Party. I generally but not always voted with the conservative party. The amendments, so far as they were adopted, made the constitution more democratic, and such has been the tendency of the amendments adopted at different times since the Convention.

I was a member of the largest committee, that on the Senate and House of Representatives, consisting of twenty-nine members.

William Prescott was its chairman, and I had, in the sittings of this committee, which were many, a good opportunity of witnessing his sagacity and adroitness, without which it would have been impossible to bing the committee to a conclusion on subjects about which there was so much diversity of opinion. I went for the greatest reduction of numbers in the House that I supposed was attainable. I was of opinion that one hundred and fifty was a sufficient number of members to represent so compact and territorially small a State as Massachusetts, however numerous its population, but so great a reduction did not then appear to be practicable. The time may come, when a division of the State into as many districts as there are Representatives will be attainable. This town was then Federal by a large majority. I consider the true Republican theory. The Now it is divided in to three parties, - Whig, men of Massachusetts, and my knowledge of out weakening themselves by a districting the principles of Free Government. Daniel system which might introduce members from Webster and William Prescott exercised, I a minority party, is a growing obstacle to think, a larger influence than any other two the introduction of this simple principle of members—the first by his eloquence,—the representation. I would propose the same second by his policy, aided by occasional but principle in regard to Senatorial Representanot frequent speaking. President John tion. When the Convention was held, the Adams was a member, but his great age and great objection to a district system was, that infirmities prevented his attendance after a great many towns would be deprived there-December 18th, when he had leave of absence, by of corporate representation, through the smallness of their population. I think that, Thorndike's. It was apparent that his mind before long, this objection will be forsaken because of the undue power and influence resulting from the aggregation of the votes of cities of which there soon will be some twelve or more, comprising a third part of the whole population of the state. The representation of the other two thirds of the people of the state would be distributed among three hundred corporations. These will find it difficult to combine their influence against the cities, and will therefore prefer being represented in districts, upon condition that the cities shall also be divided into districts.

On the seventh day of March, 1853, a town meeting was held to choose two delegates to the State Convention for amending the Constitution, and I was chosen one of the two. It is now nearly thirty-three years since I was chosen a delegate to a similar convention. The whole number of votes cast for delegates then, was 64. The whole number now given in, was 567, showing the difference in the degree of interest taken in public affairs at that day and at this. In the Convention of 1820, there were persons, who were members also of the Convention of 1780, which framed the Constitution. These were Ex-President Adams, aged eighty-five, chosen from Quincy, Dr. Parker Cleaveland, chosen from Rowley, and I think, one other. To the present Convention, of those who were members of that of 1820, the following gentlemen are chosen, viz: Nathan Hale of Boston, Rufus Bullock of Royalston, James C. Doane of Cohasset, Laban Marcy of Greenwich, Philip Eames of Washington, and myself. The Convention met on Wednesday, May 4, 1853, and at 12 o'clock, I, being the senior member in Legislative standing, though not in years, and being thereto requested, took the chair, called the Convention to order, and presided until after the choice of a President, Nathaniel P. Banks, Junr. Samuel French of Berkley, aged about seventy-six, was the oldest member and I stood next to him. I was treated with much deference and respect by the members of the Convention, and was enabled to attend in my place on a part of every sitting day. The members of the Convention of by the messenger. We received other marks of attention on account of our relation to that Convention. I was once invited by the President to preside in Committee of the whole, but excused myself on account of my deafness. On Monday, August 1st, 1853, there were three sessions, the last of which commenced at eight o'clock in the evening, and continued until six minutes before two o'clock on Tuesday morning, when the Convention adjourned without day. I continued in my seat until the final adjournment. I did not speak much in the Convention. But on the subject of the House of Representatives, on the fifteenth of June, I spoke for about one hour, and on the subject of the rights of Juries I spoke twice but not at much length. I was appointed on the Committee on Representation, consisting of twenty-one members, ten of whom were for a District system of Representation and eleven for Town Representation. I agreed with the minority and signed a minority report in favor of a Districting system, which report was drawn up by Nathan Hale, and supported by him in a speech, June 14th.

The new Constitution was rejected by the people, by a majority of about five thousand I voted in favor of its acceptance Although the Convention has generally. thus failed of accomplishing its object, yet I believe that it will lead the Legislature to make strenuous efforts to effect the necessary changes in the way for amending the Constitution provided in the instrument as it now stands.

ACCOUNT OF THE FORMATION OF THE ESSEX HISTORICAL SOCIE-

. BY G. A. WARD, A. M., S. H. S.

Read at a meeting of the Institute, January 26, 1864.

MR. PRESIDENT,

AND MEMBERS OF THE INSTITUTE:

The sole survivor of the twenty six founders of the Essex Historical Society in 1821, several of whom were my juniors in age, I am happy in complying with your request, to give an account of its formation. This I shall do in a very few sentences and with the consumption of but little of your valuable time.

It is a remarkable coincidence that myself and one other are the only survivors of sixty pupils of Billerica Academy in 1803, and well can I say with the poet

When on this vale of years I backward look And miss such numbers, numbers too of such Firmer in health, and greener in their age And stricter on their guard and fitter far To play life's subtle game, I scarce believe I still survive.

What first prompted the idea of the Society which was afterwards merged in the Essex Institute and formed on a broader basis, was a desire to obtain and secure for Salem, materials left by Rev. Wm. Bentley D. D., for a history of Salem:—and soon after the decease of this celebrated antiquarian and estimable man, application was made to his executor for the pamphlets and manuscripts amassed with much care during a long course of years. The executor admitted at once that they ought not to be removed from Salem and at the same interview stated that if a suitable society should be formed for their reception and safe keeping he would place them in its charge

This resulted in my obtaining, with the great assistance of the late Honorable John Pickering, the following signatures to a petition for a charter June 2, 1821.

Edward A. Holyoke, M.D., LL.D., A. A.S. Joseph Story, LL.D., A. A. S. John Prince, LL.D., A. A. S., S. H. S. Benjamin Pickman, A. M., A. A S. Jacob Ashton, A. M. Nathaniel Bowditch, LL.D., A. A. S. Benjamin Merrill, LL.D., S. H. S. Frederick Howes, A. M. Thomas Carlile, A. M. John Brazer, S. P. D., A. A. S. Dan'l A. White, LL.D, A. A. S., S. H. S. John Glen King, A. M., S H. S. Gideon Barstow, M. D., M. C. William Gibbs Esq. Charles C. Clark, A. M. Joseph Aug. Peabody, A. M. Thomas P. Bancroft, Esq. Benj. R. Nichols, A. M., S. H. S. Stephen White, Esq. George A. Ward, A. M., S. H. S.

This petition stated the objects of the society to be "for the purpose of collecting and preserving materials for the civil and natural history of the County of Essex."

The charter was soon obtained, which authorized the venerable Holyoke to call the first meeting, by which the Society was organized, by filling the two highest offices with the sage Holyoke, and the admirable Story.

Citizens distinguished in the walks of seience and literature in other places, were elected honorary members, among which was the nephew and executor of Dr. Bentley. These measures were all duly notified to the executor, but he, meanwhile, had changed his mind; refused to comply with his agreement and finally made a very different disposition of the collection. It is understood that the College at Meadville and the Antiquarian Society at Worcester shared the treasure.

Nothing daunted by our disappointment in our primary objects, we have persevered in rescuing from the "tooth of time," many valuable books, pamphlets and manuscripts as well as portraits of persons of note of the past ages. These formed a nucleus around which, under more favorable auspices, and another name, a Library, Gallery and Cabinet of curiosities have been collected which may vie with the best institutions of the state.

Plummer Hall at this moment presents the most attractive objects of interest to strangers, for whilst the lectures and meetings of the Institute are constantly shedding light; offering superior advantages to the student of natural history, the antiquary and man of letters can luxuriate in the Library and Gallery.

It is no mean praise to claim among our departed members such magnates as Bowditch, Pickering, Cutler, Dane, Prince. White, Saltonstall, Pickman and Silsbee, who truly adorned their day and generation. Their works will long survive.

Having closed my remarks upon the institution, indulge me, I pray, in a word or two of my native state and city, to which I have returned after an absence of forty-two years, and when past the age alloted to man.

Of Massachusetts, ever the head quarters of good principles, more than half a century ago, when repelling an attack upon i in Cengress, the illustrious Quincy quoted according ing lines from Homer and the sentiment they contain cannot but be felt by us all.

"Low lies that land, yet blessed with fruitful stores, Strong are her sons, tho' rocky are her shores, Yet none, ah! none so lovely to my sight, Of all the lands which heaven o'erspreads with light."

To return to one's birth place and find it become a city, with a doubled population, yet preserving the same love of order, quiet neatness and moral standing, as in its primitive days, is indeed a marvel. It surely presents for a residence every attraction to the old and middle aged that can make life happy, while its proximity to the noisy capital is such, that the young can easily avail themselves of its amusements.

The Historical associations too, of Salem, are second to none on the continent. first place in which civil and religious liberty were duly installed by the first Governor Endicott, the clergy and laity, and thank God! the first meeting house has been preserved, and will, by the munificence of one of your members soon be placed on the grounds of Plummer Hall, and be visited by future generations to a remote age. Here, too, the first resistance to Royal authority was made. Gov. Gage's minions failed to dissolve the Colonial Assembly, then in session in Court Hall, adjoining the first Church - and here too, the first re--sistence was made at the North bridge -- royal power was successfully repulsed when Leslie attempted to take our cannon. We are not in want of patriotic motives. Our army and navy show how Salem appreciates her blessings. "As much as I have wandered over the world, my heart and affections have always had their stationary points," and it is my happiness to believe that the few remaining friends of my earlier years will continue to be those of my old age.

"Where'er I roam, whatever realms I see,
My heart, untravell'd, fendly turns to thee,"
Salem, my birth place dear.

"And as the hare, whom hounds and horns pursue,
Pants to the place from which at first it flew;
I still had hopes, my long vexations past,
Here to return, and die, at home, at last."

BOSTON NUMISMATIC SOCIETY

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Thursday, Jan. 7, 1864, and was very well attended. Several donations were received, and the annual reports of the officers were presented. The Treasurer's report showed a balance of money to the credit of the society, and the Curator stated the number of coins and medals to be about one thousand, among which are several rare pieces. A committee was appointed to present a list of offi cers for the present year; they reported the former board for re-election, which was the pleasure of the society. The officers are therefore as follows: President-Dr. Winslow Lewis; Vice President and Curator-Jeremiah Colburn; Treasurer-Henry Davenport; Secretary-Wm. S. Appleton.

Mr. Seavey exhibited a small parcel of very choice and valuable American coins. Among them were a silver dollar of 1794, the finest known; a half-dime of 1802, one of five, the whole number believed to exist at present, or rather known to collectors to exist, and a New York copper of 1787 with the head of George Clinton, which is by far the finest of the half dozen known. The collection also contained other rare varieties of New York coppers, unusually perfect specimens of early dimes, and rare patterns prepared at the U.S. Mint, but never adopted for the coinage. Mr Seavey also showed the two half-eagles by the acquisition of which he had completed his series of the issues of gold of the United States. Other gentlemen exhibited coins of less value and interest. The meeting was an unusually pleasant and successful one.

CONNECTION WITH PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS

Though Judge White lived for many years in comparative retirement, neither the charm of books, nor of social intercourse, absorbed his thought. He retired from all strife for the prince of the world, but he never remitted his labors for its welfare. No man was more alive to the highest interests of the Community, the Commonwealth, and the Country; and he exerted an active public influence even to his last days, by his connection with Literary and very near his heart. The love which he nequired for it when an undergrade ate, was greatly increased during his four years residence at Cambridge as a Tutor. His correspondence with Prof. Hedge for a number of years after he resigned his tutorship, is largely devoted to the affairs of the College and shows the intensity of his interest in overything that related to its administration, or which could promote its prosperity. These words are in his Journal, Sept. 27th, 1804:

"Heard of the death of that excellent and beloved man, President Willlard, and I wept most of all that I should see his face no more." The quastion of a successor at that time, and in every vacancy in the Presidency of the Institution during his long life, held a foremost place in his mind; and no man labored with greater zeal, or perhaps with greater efficiency, to secure the appointment of men to that high office, who should not only confer honor upon the College, but help to make the oldest, also the best and noblest seat of learning in the country. He was jealous of its reputation in all respects, and prompt to enter the lists as its defender or advocate, when charges were made against it amid the changes in Ecclesiastical, or Political affairs. He was a member of the Board of Overseers for eleven years. He mentions in his diarry other ways in which he was ready to help it, and speaks of a contribution which he could not withhold, "when a movement was made for the increase of the library in 1842, although he felt himself little able to make it on account of recent losses;" and then adds the words which were always in his heart, if not upon his lips, "God bless the College." As might have been expected from his character, he regarded the moral tone of the Institution as of supreme importance. In his diary, Jan. 12th, 1842, he says:

"What pleased me at the Examination public dinner, yesterday, was the total absence of all beverage but cold water, it being the first time I ever witnessed such a spectacle on any occasion of the kind at Cambridge. Hope it will be so at Commencement. Told the President yesterday, at dinner time, that I thought it more important at College than any where else, that abstinence from intoxicating drinks should be sacredly observed." At a later date he expresses his great joy at the stand which President Everett had taken upon that subject, and adds, "All this should be sacredly adhered to." It was this deep interest in the moral welfare of the College which induced him to make the suggestion in his Address to the Alumni in 1844, in respect to a Professorship of the Philosophy of the Moral Life, which led to the bequest from Miss Plummer of this city, for the foundation of the Plummer Professorship of Christian Morals. While he delighted in every advance in the scholarship of the College, it was his cardinal principle that moral training should hold the sovereign place in all educational plans; and he never permitted an opportunity to be lost, when he could press its paramount claims. It is proper to say that the College did not forget the claim of so loval and distinguished a son to her honors, and conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws, in 1837.

The Divinity School at Cambridge was another object of his peculiar regard. He was one of the directors of the Society for the promotion of Theological Education in Cambridge, which was formed in 1816, and reörganized in 1824. This Society collected funds for the erection of Divinity Hall, and labored with greater zeal, or perhaps with greater efficiency, to secure the appointment of men to that high office, who should not only corder homor apon the College, but help to make the oldest, also the best and noblect seat of learning in the country. As might have been expected from his character, he regarded the moral tone of the lastitution as of supreme inportance. In his diary, Jan. 12th, 1842, he says:

The Divinity School at Cambridge was another object of his poculiar regard. He was one of the directors of the Society for the promotion of Theological Education in Cambridge, which was formed in 1816, and recorded in 1824. This Society collected funds for the exection of Divinity Hall, and laid the foundation of the present Theological School. The Institution interested him most deeply, because it was based upon the following broad principle, which entirely commended itself alike to his judgment and his heart. "It being understood, that every encouragement be given to the serious, impartial and unbiassed investigation of Christian truth; and that no assent to the peculiarities of any denomination of Christians be required of the students, or professors, or instructors." He retained the same paternal interest in the School to the end of life; and his last visit to Cambridge, the last public occasion of any kind which he attended, was at the Annual Meeting of the Visiting Committee of the Divinity School, of which he had long been a member, on the 2nd of Japuary, 1861.

He was an active member of many prominent philanthropic and literary associations, such as the Charitable Congregational Society; the Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Indians, and others in North America; the Mass. Historical Society; the Academy of Arts and Sciences—and a faithful attendant upon their meetings, so long as his strength permitted him to be present. Remembering the high place which these Associations held in his regard, both on account of his conviction of the importance of the objects which they were designed to promote, and of his warm friendship for the distinguished men with whom he was then connected, the following brief entry in his diary, only a few weeks before his death, gains a touching interest: "Received notice of Mass. Historical Meeting, on Thursday, which is, and probably must ever be an empty ceremony while I live." No similar summons ever was an empty ceremony to him, till his last illness rendered it impossible for him longer to mingle with those to whom his heart clung even to the end.

This habitual and untiring interest in the improvement and welfare of society made him prompt to give his approbation and his exertions to every wise project which promised to promote it. When Lyceums were first established in the State, and a public meeting for consultation respecting them was held in Boston, in 1829, he heartily entered into the movement. He was chosen President of the Essex County Lyceum, and gave an Address at its first Annual Meeting in Ipswich, May 5th, 1830. The Address was printed. It explained the design of the Institution, and its uses, with an answer to some objections which had been made against it. He was the first President of the Salem Lyceum, and continued to be one of its three trustees, always interested in its prosperity, until his death. The following extract from a letter to his classmate, Hon. Horace Binney, to whom he had sent a copy of his Ly-

He was the first President of the Salem Lyceum, and continued to be one of its three trustees, always into ested in its prosperity, until his death. The following extract from a letter to bis classmate, Hom. Horsac thinney, to whom he had sent a copy of his Ips ceum Address, gives a glimpse of his idea of the purpose of such institutions, and of one of the incidental benefits which he hoped might result from their establishment:

"I was led to concern myself with the institution of a Lyceum, from a desire to give it a different character, in some respects, from what I feared it might assume. It appeared to me important that it should be so conducted as to afford miscellaneous instruction and entertainment, on moral and literary topics, adapted to an audience of both sexes, instead of being confined to scientific lectures, and thus be made to serve for the purposes of popular recreation."

His hope was that it might thus to some extent, at least, preclude the demand for questionable forms of public amusement; and he names in the same letter encouraging indications of such a desirable result. To show how truly his mind was alive to this great idea of popular education and improvement, we quote another passage from a letter written in 1835, to an old College friend, whose honored name had just before been given in support of an Association for the supply of teachers:

"It reminded me of what I have often contemplated as worthy to be supported by such influence, and, if so supported, as calculated to do an immense good to the next generation, and the present too—that is, an association extending over the country, by uniting some of the wise and good from every part, for the purpose of improving and elevating the morals of young men, especially the educated, and those belonging to our cities and populous towns, by circulating or recommending the best books for reading, providing lectures from eminent men, and other impressive means of moral influence. Might not an Association be formed on some such plan which would promote this great object, and advance the moral well-being of our country? I only trouble you with a hint on this subject, a full discussion of which might fill a volume."

No such hint, whether originated by another's mind, or by his own, was lost upon himself. It was in beautiful accordance with such words as these, that, near the close of his life, in 1852, he made a gift of six acres of land, which then remained of his father's farm, situated in the central part of the City of Lawrence, to promote the object which he had so much at heart. By negotiations with the Essex Company, which were honorable to all parties concerned, all restrictions in respect to the erection of buildings upon the land were removed, and it was conveyed to trustees to be sold, and the proceeds to be used as a fund, eventually to establish a public library, and provide for public lectures, because he had "at heart the welfare of his native place, and earnestly desired to do something to promote the prosperity and improvement of its now numerous population." His desire was "to have special reference to the wants of the young, and of the industrial classes;" for his great object was, "the education and training up of the young, in habits of industry, morality, and piety, and in the exercise of true Christian principles, both in thought and action." It was a free gift, which he regarded as the payment of a sacred debt, and for which he claimed no honor. When complimented respecting it, at a public occasion in Lawrence, not long after, he felt himself obliged to disclaim the extent of credit attributed to him, and spoke of the noble old farm as it was in his boyhood, closing his remarks with the following sentiment: "The prosperity of the City of Lawrence; May its beauties of Art, rival its former beauties of Nature, and may its moral dignity equal its material splendor." This fund already amounts to about ten thousand dollars, while one half of the original gift of land remains unsold.

Judge White was a sincere and practical philanthropist. He took great interest in the Temperance reformation, and gave a consistent support to the principle of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, both in precept and in practice. He discountenanced the use of tobacco also, as in his judgment equally unnecessary and offensive. He was moderate in his views, and could not assent to many opinions and measures which he considered extreme and violent. But he was ready and anxious, irrespective of other men's opinion, or popular favor, to give his support to everything which might help forward these reformatory movements, so far as it commended itself to his judgment and his conscience. If the case could be made clear to his eminently balanced and judicial mind, his heart and his hand were never wanting.

INTEREST IN POLITICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS.

In other aspects of his life, Judge White was the same earnest man. Truly devoted to everything which touched the public welfare, he became, by the necessity of his nature, an ardent patriot. Loyalty with him was both a principle and a passion, and his love of country took hold of the depths of his heart. He was born on the day on which the motion was made in the American Congress, by Richard Henry Lee, to declare the colonies independent. He came forward into manhood under the administration of Washington, and acquired the profoundest reverence for him, and for those associated with him in the highest offices of the government. He detested Aaron Burr, and mourned the disastrous death of Hamilton as a profound personal grief. That

INTEREST IN POLITICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL

In other aspects of his life, Judge White was the same carnest mass. The ly devoted to everything which touched the public welfare, he became, by the necessity of his nature, an ardeat patriot. Loyalty with him was both a principle and a passion, and his love of country took hold of the depths of his heart. He was born on the day on which the motion was made in the American Con Congress, by Hichard Henry Lac, to declare the colombes independent. He came forward into manhood under the administration of Washington and acquired the profoundust reverence for him, and for those associated a 1th him in the highest offices of the government. He detested Amon Bure and mourned the disastrous death of Hamilton as a profound personal greet. That grief was never forgotten. He says in 1841, after he had been reading the short life of Hamilton in the Family Library: "The closing part very touching, renewing the tears which flowed so freely thirty seven years ago, and the sad and deep feeling for such a public loss, and wanton sacrifice of life, under circumstances so tragic and deplorable." His life-long feeling about Washington and his administration found expression in the following terms in a letter to his son, after he had been reading the first volume of Sparks' Life:

"It is refreshing and delightful to look back upon such a character, and such patriotism and public spirit as we find in him and his associates in the government. Wisdom, integrity, public virtue and pure patriotism, then animated the administration, from Washington through every subordinate department. When you have leisure for miscellaneous reading, you can find nothing better than this life of Washington, which is sure to repay you in entertainment, besides affording you the noblest lessons of wisdom and virtue. From him you may learn, though you should never hold a public office, much that is applicable to every condition of life; self-control, self-denial, self-respect, views elevated above transient pleasure to high purposes, and a steadfast adherence in all your conduct to your own principles, and the resolutions you have formed. The influence of such an example can scarcely fail to find its way to the heart and into the life of every ingenuous young man, who contemplates it with anything of a kindred spirit. And where is the ingenuous young man who would not wish to cherish such a spirit?"

Judge White was an ardent Federalist while that party continued in existence, and undeviatingly defended its purity and patriotism. He was one of the Electors for President in 1816, when the Massachusetts Electoral College unanimously cast their votes for John Marshall, of Virginia. After the dissolution of the Federal party he became a Whig. During the last years of his life he was a Republican, and voted for Fremont in 1856, and for Lincoln in 1860. This last change in his party relations he always maintained to be no change of principle, even in the slightest degree. Upon being asked where he should go at the time of the organization of the Republican party upon the basis of the exclusion of Slavery from the Territories, his answer was, "I shall not go anywhere, but stay where I have always been. This was the principle of the days of Washington." After reading Gov. Seward's speech, which was made at that time concerning the aggressions of the slave power, he said, "I cannot but feel sympathy with such men as he in opposing the further encroachments of this dread power upon free territories. The question in my mind is of awful consequence whether these future States shall be blessed with true freedom, or cursed with slavery; whether the Olive tree or the Upas shall be planted, to bless, or to blast."

He was conservative in opinion and feeling. He was not an Abolitionist in the technical sense in which that word has been generally used since the agitation of the slave question during the last twenty or thirty years. He regarded the position which many abolitionists assumed in respect to the dissolution of the Union as radically wrong, and condemned their denunciations as unwise and indefensible. But he was utterly hostile to Slavery itself. After reading the life of Thomas Fowell Buxton, he noticed it with "great interest and delight," as "almost persuading him to be an abolitionist, altogether indeed such an one as he was." He detested the cruel prejudice against the colored race. This entry occurs in his diary, for 1841. "Read account of the Monument Cemetery of————. Struck with one of the by-laws which provides that "no person of color shall ever be interred there." Pitiful! wondrous pitiful." When the question of the admission of colored children into the Public Schools was agitated in 1844, he speaks in the following forcible terms:

"Had some warm conversation on the subject of admitting colored children to our Public Schools, for which I contended. I should have no fears my children would be contaminated by black skins, but by moral blackness, often found beneath the most aristocratic white skins. I said the committee should follow out the rule of right, and of Christian morality, and all would ultimately acquiesce."

His position was, conscientiously to sustain the compromises of the Constitution; but he jealously watched the persistent aggressions of the Slave power, and his indignation in regard to them was aroused many years before his death. Dec. 12th, 1844, he says in his Journal, "The papers this morning tell us that my friend, Mr. Hoar, sent to South Carolina to protect citizens of Mass. (colored) in their rights against unlawful imprisonment, has been expelled from Charleston by legislative resolve of that State,—an outrage worthy of their nullifying character, and mad devotion to Slavery, and of the abominable course taken by their political idol, Calhoun; but we trust it is a madness which precedes their own defeat."

This indignation never abated, but steadily increased, and it is interesting to trace its growth. At the time of the debates on the Fugitive Slave Bill in 1851, he writes thus:

"Read Mr. Mann's able speech, and cannot but agree with him in his main views of the Fugitive Slave Law,—a law least of all others entitled to privileges of any sort, and which must hang as a millstone upon any Administration, or party, identifying itself with it, bound at all events to sustain it in all its odious features."

He was conservative in opinion and feeling. He was not an Aboliticalist in the technical sense in which that word has been generally used since the agricultion of the slave question during the last twenty or thirty years. He regarded the position which many abolitionists assumed as respect to the dissolution of the Union as radically wrong, and condomned their demandations as unwise and indefensible. But he was utterly hostile to Shavey itself. After reading the life of Thomas Fowell Baxton, he noticed it with "great interest and delight," as "almost persuading him to be an abolitionist, altogether indeed such an one as he was." He detested the cruck prejudice against the coldered more. This entry occurs in his diary, for 1841. "Head assumet of the Monument Cemetery of——. When the question of the admission of colored children into drous pitiful." When the question of the admission of colored children into drous pitiful. Schools was agitated in 1844, he speaks in the following forcible terms:

"Had some warm conversation on the subject of adulting colored enddren to our Public Schools, for which I contended. I should have no four new children would be contaminated by black skins, but by moral blackness, often found beneath the most pristogratic white skins. I said the committee should follow out the rule of right, and of Christian morality, and all would ultimately acquiesce."

His position was, conscientionally to sustain the compromises of the Constitution; but he jealously watched the persistent aggressions of the Slave nower, and his indignation in regard to them was aroused many years before his death. Dec. 12th, 1844, he says in his Journal. "The papers this morning tell us that my friend, Mr. Hear, sent to South Carolina to protect estimate of Mark (colored) in their rights against unlawful imprisonment, has been expelled from Charleston by legislative resolve of that State,—an outrage worthy of their nullifying character, and mad devotion to Slavery, and of the abominable course taken by their political idel, Calboun; but we trust it is a madness which precedes their own defeat."

This indignation never abated, but steadily increased, and it is interesting to trace its growth. At the time of the debates on the Fagitive Slave Bill in 1851, he writes time:

"Read Mr. Mann's able, speech, and cannot but agree with him in his main views of the Fugitive Slave Law,—a law least of all others entitled to privileges of any sort, and which rough hans as a millatone upon any Administration, or party, identifying itself with it, bound at all events to sactoin it in all its odious features."

After the Burns case in 1854, he writes:

"People and papers full of agitation about the slave (Burns) being sent back, and the great excitement in Boston. All under God's good Providence may eventuate well, and serve to overthrow the evil law which ought never to have existed."

In respect to the Dred Scott decision, after saying, "It ought to rouse all in opposition to Slavery extension more resolutely than ever," he writes, in 1857, as follows:

"I cannot believe that its judicial effect will be durable; for so far as I have had an opportunity to judge, it appears to want the essential requisites of permanent law—foundation in truth. From the abstract of Judge Taney's opinion that I have seen, it seems to assume what is false, and to proceed upon false premises. Justice Curtis's opinion is, I think, as able and satisfactory a document of the kind as I have ever read. He is clear, close, and conclusive on every point, proving unanswerably every position he takes, and overthrowing all objections raised against it. The permanent law of the case must be in accordance with truth and reason, not with fallible opinions of fallible men. These will pass away together, while the basis of law remains the same forever."

It was his constant motto, "Never to despair of the Republic;" yet his anxiety respecting public affairs greatly increased during these later years. The assault upon Mr. Sumner, roused his indignation to the highest degree. He characterizes it in his diary, as "most cowardly, mean, ferocious, and brutal," and adds, "If the House do not expel the ruffian, and the Senate protect its dignity, then ruffianism is transferred from the borders of Kansas to the walls of the Capitol."

But although made greatly anxious by the threatening aspect of affairs at the South, he was slow to believe in the possibility of a wide-spread rebellion, without "a single grievance, or pretence of grievance," to justify or palliate it. Such an unnatural crime against the sacredness of Law, and the spirit of liberty, seemed too monstrous to be believed. But when the crisis drew near, he was not intimidated. His courage rose as the clouds grew dark. He had no patience with reasoning about the Union. He remembered Washington, who denounced those who started a doubt upon the subject. He believed in decided measures, and commended Andrew Johnson's speech in Dec. 1860, as presenting the true point of distinction between "coercing a State, and executing the Laws against individuals in a seceding State"—the latter of which he says, "Mr. Johnson is ready to do in the most effective manner, for the preservation of the Union at all hazards." On Mr. Floyd's resignation as Secretary of war, he dismissed him with the following sentence—"One traitor the less in the Cabinet; would that all were gone." As his strength failed in the last weeks of his life, just before the bursting of the storm of Civil War, his patriotism burned with deepest fervor. When he was only able to pen a few brief sentences in his diary from day to day, he speaks of "the insane follies of the maddened South," and adds, "I shall not be here to suffer long from them." Still later, he says, "Read some in evening papers; enough to make my blood boil." Only a week before his death, referring to the visit of a friend, he says, "Speaks as I feel about Secession, Treason." Those who saw him in his very latest days will never forget how his love of country would make him insensible for the moment to weakness and disease, until his voice regained its vigor, and he would pour out inspiring words of devotion and heroism, with his former manly strength. And thus loyal to his country, as he was faithful to society, the aged patriot went to his rest. But his spirit was transmitted to his descendants. Four of his grandchildren, sons of William Dwight, Esq., hurried to the field at the first call to arms, where they rendered heroic service to the country. Two of them have fallen, both young men of the fairest promise. One, Lt. Col. Wilder Dwight, of the 2nd Mass. Volunteers, fell at Antietam. The other, Capt. Howard Dwight, Assistant Adjutant General to Brig. Gen. Andrews, in Louisiana. When riding alone, on turning a bend of the road, he suddenly found himself covered by the rifles of three guerrillas, on the opposite side of a bayou, and called upon to surrender. Though he acknowledged himself their prisoner, he was barbarously shot. It was a ferocious and brutal deed, fitly symbolizing the spirit that prompted the outrage upon Senator Sumner, which his grandfather so indignantly denounced.

Any sketch of Judge White's life would be incomplete, which did not make distinct, though brief mention of his religious opinions, and his special views in respect to Ecclesiastical affairs. After his removal from Newbury-port, he connected himself with the First Church in this city, and continued to worship there during the rest of his life. He had many other warm and life-long interests, but Christian truth held the sovereign place, and religion lay at the bottom of his heart. His diary and letters show how constantly it occupied his thoughts. Each New Year, and the recurrence of each birth-day, called forth a new dedication of himself to its service, increasing in earnestness as age drew on, but always penned in a childlike simplicity of faith and trust. Very often he notices the Theological books which had occupied his studies. March 28th, 1841, he writes thus:

make distinct, though brief mandom of his refrigural spinning, and has slown in respect to its federal admirs. After his reserval near New York, he connected himself with the First Charan in the case, and compart, he connected himself with the First Charan in the case, and con the worship there thering the rest of his line. Very often he nothers the Theological books within an according to the

"Locke, Coleridge and the Bible. Read Coleridge's Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit - good, but partakes of his common faults - should like it better if it had more of the clearness and simplicity of Locke, whom elsewhere this same Coleridge undervalues." "It is the spirit of the Bible, and not the detached words and sentences, that is infallible and absolute. I find little to dissent from in this book, which contains many fine passages. I have always felt the truth of the following sentiment: "The truth revealed through Chrst has its evidence in itself, and the proof of its divine authority is in its fitness to our nature and needs; the clearness and cogency of the proof being proportionate to the degree of self-knowledge in each individual hearer." Christianity has likewise its historical evidences, and these are as strong as is compatible with the nature of history, and with the aims and objects of a religious dispensation. Take in addition Christianity itself as an existing power in the world, and Christendom as an existing fact, with the no less evident fact of a progressive expansion, and the whole gives a force of moral demonstration that almost supersedes particular testimony."

He had made the Scriptures a study through his life-time. Perhaps no man ever studied them more conscientiously or carefully. But though he became thoroughly settled in Unitarian views, he was as catholic in respect to others' opinions as he was decided in his own. He believed that others were as conscientious as himself, and was impatient of every thing that did not recognize the truest freedom of religious thought. His faith was more of the heart than of the head, and he recognized true sincerity among men of every creed, and hailed the manifestations of the Christian life in every church with the utmost alacrity and joy. Sectarianism was his perpetual aversion, and he would have contended against it in himself as earnestly as he warred against it in others. Indeed he chiefly valued Unitarianism, not on account of its doctrines, but of its distinct and unqualified recognition of the right of every man to interpret the Scriptures for himself, and adopt his own religious views, uncensured by fallible men, unfettered by human creeds.

This was an opinion which Judge White most sacredly cherished, and most consistently followed out. He could never recognize any form of opinions as the basis of Christian fellowship. "The Bible and the Bible only," he deemed the proper creed, and he desired to leave all men wholly to that, perfectly aware that men of different temperaments and different mental tendencies, would read it with different eyes, and be led to different conclusions. He believed that every church should rest upon this broad basis, and considered every form of test-creed as an invasion of the mind's most sacred rights, and a breach of Christian liberty. His consistent fidelity to this position led him into controversy at different periods of his life. He engaged in a correspondence be-

I have always felt the truth of the following sentiment: "The truth revented through Chust has its evidence in itself, and the proof of its divine authority is in its proportionate to the degree of self-knowledge in each individual learner. Obvistionate to the degree of self-knowledge in each individual learner. Obvistionate to the degree of self-knowledge in each individual learner. Obvistionate with the nature of history, and with the aims and objects of a recompatible with the nature of history, and with the aims and objects of a recompatible with the nature of history, and with the aims and objects of a recompatible with the nature of history, and with the notes of the power of a progressive expansion, and the whole gives a force of moral demonstration that almost supersedes particular testimony."

He had made the Scriptures a study through his ide-thate, rectange he man over studied them more consciontionally or carefully. But though he became thoroughly settled in Unitarian views, he was as calkelic in respect to others' opinions as he was decided in his own. He holieved that others were as conscientlous as himself, and was impatient of every thing that did not recognize the truest freedom of religious thought. His faith was more of the heart than of the head, and he recognized true sincerity among men of avery crossed, and halled the manifestations of the Christian life in overy church with the atmost abscrity and joys, featurisation was his perpetual aversion, and be would have contended against it in himself as carnestly as he warred against it in others. Indeed he chiefly valued Unitarianism, not on account of its doctrines, but of its distinct and unqualified recognition of the right of every man to interpret the Scriptures for himself, and adopt his own religious views, manes on the fallible men, unfattered by human creeds.

This was an opinion which Judge White most sacredly cherished, and most consistently followed out. He could never recognize any form of opinions as the basis of Christian followship. "The Bible and the Bible only," he dermed the proper creed, and be desired to leave all men whelly to that, perfectly award that men of different temperaments and different mental tendencies, would read it with different eyes, and be led to different conclusions. He believed that every church should rest apartials broad basis, and considered every form of test-creed as an invasion of the mind's most sacred rights, and a breach of Christian liberty. The consistent fidelity to this position too him into contropondence because of very at different periods of his life. He entaged in a correspondence becomes tween the First and the Tabernacle Church in this city, in 1832, which involved this principle; and which we only refer to now in order to mention one letter in the course of the controversy from his pen, extending to one hundred and twenty seven pages, in defence of Protestant and Congregational liberty. It was marked by his thorough learning and vigor of thought, and deserves to hold a prominent place in the record of his literary labors.

Indeed, he believed that this principle of Christian liberty for which he so zealously contended was the doctrine of the original New England Churches themselves. He never questioned that their opinions were Calvinistic, or that they strenuously insisted upon the doctrines of Calvinism. His position was, that at the settlement of the country, they were so mindful of the spirit of John Robinson's oft quoted words respecting the greater light yet to break forth from God's word, as to associate themselves together in churches under a simple covenant, such as is found on the earliest records of the First Church in Salem, and in Plymouth, interweaving no special statements of doctrine in the original basis of their organization. A controversy arose between Rev. Dr. Worcester and himself in respect to this point of history in 1854. In his earnestness to maintain his own position, to use his own language, "First in defence of the truly Protestant foundation of the First Church" (of Salem,) and "secondly, in defence of historical truths," he was induced to prepare an elaborate work, entitled "New England Congregationalism, in its Origin and Purity," which occupied the last months, and almost the last weeks of his life. It was printed in a volume of more than 300 pages, and had scarcely left the press at the time of his death. The truth of history, whatever it may be, will be finally vindicated. Whether Judge White's positions were right or not, beyond all question, the merit must be awarded to him of undeviating consistency in his opinions, and of untiring labor in their defence. And it is a striking and affecting circumstance, that this principle of Christian liberty, which he deemed so precious, should have occupied his latest thought, and commanded the last labors of his pen.

The position which Judge White held in Salem during the last twenty or thirty years of his life was so universally acknowledged, and the influence which he exerted was so beneficent, that we have reserved a distinct place for this aspect of his character. The brilliant circle into which he was welcomed on his removal from Newburyport was soon broken. Dr. Bowditch took up his residence in Boston in 1823. Hon. John Pickering followed him in 1827.

Judge Story removed to Cambridge in 1829. Dr. Holyoke died in the same year. Dr. Prince died in 1836, and Hon. Leverett Saltonstall in 1843. Others also passed away. Judge White was thus left for many years as almost the only survivor of that remarkable company of men, who was still a resident of the city. It was natural, therefore, that all eyes should spontaneously turn to him on occasions of great public interest. On the death of Dr. Bowditch in March 1838, when the City desired to offer public honors to the memory of one of her most distinguished sons, it was instantly felt that Judge White must be the person to express her reverence. He was peculiarly fitted to fulfil that sacred service by his full appreciation of Dr. Bowditch's eminent qualities as a scholar and a man. He speaks of a brief interview with Dr. Bowditch a few days before his death, and of his character, in the following words:

"I had a very precious conversation with him which I shall never forget, and for which I feel very thankful. He conversed in the most affectionate and interesting manner to me upon the relation we sustain to Divine Providence, and the duty of entire submission in all things. I have always held his character in the highest admiration as a combination of the richest qualities of human nature—of head and heart—theory and practice—public spirit and social benevolence. Rarely has there lived a man, especially a self-educated man, who accomplished so much for Science, for society, and for friends—who attained such eminence in the learned world, and was so useful and so beloved in the walks of business and of private life."

The Eulogy was delivered on the 24th of May 1838, and printed in a pamphlet of 72 pages. Of its character it is enough to say, that it did equal credit to its subject and its author.

In 1846 he was called to perform a similar service before the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, on the death of his friend, Hon. John Pickering. In this case also he was preëminently the man to pay such a tribute. He had known and honored Mr. Pickering since the day when they first met as fellow students in the Law Office of Judge Putnam. He writes as follows in his Journal, May 6th, 1846:

He writes as follows in his Journal, May 6th, 1846:

"Heard this morning of the afflicting intelligence for which I was prepared on Monday, of the death of Heat. John Pickering, LL. D., my good friend, and a most excellent man; distinguished for purity of mind, heart, character, taste, feeling and principle: at the head of American Philologists; accomplished as a Classical scholar, and as a Christian gentleman. His death makes a chasm not easily, or soon to be filled—one which will be long felt and deplored—his merits being personal, intrinsic, rare."

On May 8th, two days later, he writes again:

"I feel Mr. Pickering's loss with no little sadness, following as it does in quick succession that of Saltonstall and Story, all luminaries of Salem. How rich must Salem have been with all these, and Dr. Bowditch and Dr. Prince added to them."

When engaged in the preparation of his Eulogy he says, "I find a fullness of materials, and a difficulty in selection and arrangement. But I must do as well as I can. I shall not fail from want of heart in the subject." And again, a few months afterwards, in speaking of the five Eulogies which he had delivered,—the first upon his class-mate Wellington, when an under-graduate; the second upon the death of Washington, delivered in the Meeting House, in Methuen, Jan. 13th, 1800, at the request of the people of his native town, prepared at a few days notice, without books to refer to, when at home on a short vacation, and which was his first printed discourse; the third upon Mr. Shapleigh, the Librarian at Harvard, in April of the same year; the fourth upon Dr. Bowditch; and the fifth upon Mr. Pickering,—two of which had necessarily been prepared in haste—he says, "The first was written with some pains, the fourth with more, and the fifth with most. None afforded me more interest and pleasure than the last, which I am very sure will always be my last, as I think it is my best."

He could not fail from "want of heart" in these sacred tributes to friends, for no man's friendships were deeper, or more sincere. The Eulogy upon Mr. Pickering, whom he depicts as a "model scholar," was delivered Oct. 20th, 1846, and printed in a pamphlet of 106 pages, at Cambridge.

When it was proposed to open a new Cemetery in the City in 1840, he was selected as the most fitting person to give the Consecrating Address. On account of indisposition, he felt himself obliged at first to decline that service. The following extract from a letter written at the time, shows how earnestly he entered into this, as into every project, alike for the adornment and improvement of the City.

me sufficient time, at such short notice, to perform the duty required of me in a proper manner. The more I have thought of the plan of establishing such a Cemetery in our immediate vicinity, the more important it appears. The place selected is the very one of all others best adapted by nature for such a purpose, and admits of all desirable improvements from Art, with all possible embellishments of taste. When completed it will be a most attractive spot for a rural walk, as well as for a rural burying place, combining a thousand interesting associations, continually increasing in number and character to render it delightful, and in a moral view, highly useful. An indissoluble association exists with the departed friend or relative in the survivor's heart, leading his thoughts and feelings constantly to the spot where their remains are deposited. When this is a disagreeable or dreary place, it is shocking to the mourner's sensibility; when like Mt. Auburn, or the expected Harmony Grove, it is, on the contrary, soothing to his feelings, connecting with the object of his grief pleasing associations, which serve to diffuse cheerfulness over his spirits, and to strip death of its gloomy terrors."

The desire that he should give the Address was so strong that the invitation was renewed. It was delivered June 14th, 1840, and was afterwards printed.

Judge White became connected, either by liberal contributions, or official service, sometimes by both, with every prominent literary or philanthropic association in Salem. His interest in the Lyceum has been already mentioned. He was President of the old Essex Historical Society, and the Salem Athenæum, the Salem Dispensary, and the Salem Savings Bank. But the service which he rendered in founding and endowing the Essex Institute demands especial notice. When the Essex Historical, and the Essex County Natural History Societies were merged in the Institute, in 1848, he was chosen its President, and continued to hold that office until his death. Since that union was accomplished, by the constant devotion of persons interested in its various departments of Science, or History, and by the tireless labors of its Secretary, the Institute has become a living and active association. At first its library was very small, comprising only twelve or thirteen hundred volumes. Judge White soon determined to transfer a large number of his own books to its shelves. In 1851, he made his first large contribution, in addition to volumes previously given to the Historical and Natural History Societies, of which he thus speaks, May 12th:

"Selected more books for the Essex Institute, chiefly French, Latin and Greek, with many small volumes, literary, biographical, historical &c., and some very valuable; as Barton's Flora, in three quarto volumes, superb plates, which I bought in Providence, when attending Commencement in 1827; Har-

Judge White In 1851, he made his first large contribution, in addition to volumes previously given to the Historical and Natural History Societies, of which he thus speaks.

May 12th:

"Selected more books for the Essex Institute, chiefly French, Latin and Greek, with many small volumes; literary, biographical, historical &c., and some very valuable; as Barton's Flora, in three quarto volumes, superb plates, which I bought in Providence, when attending Commoncement in 1827; Harrington's Oceana, and other works which I imported twenty years ago or more, Athenae, Oxonienses, &c., all amounting, perhaps, to about 400 volumes; and I have enough more to send, doubtless, to make the number exceed 3000."

In 1857 he made another contribution at the time of the removal of the Institute to its present rooms in Plummer Hall, of which he thus speaks, July 14th:

"I have been very busy in closing my remittance of books to the Essex Institute, making in all over a thousand volumes of valuable books, amounting at a moderate estimate to between 1,300 and 1,400 dollars. With those sent before, of whose value I make no particular estimate, the number exceeds four thousand volumes."

In addition to these, by his will, he directed that over 3,000 more should be given, so that his entire contributions amount to more than eight thousand volumes, and about ten thousand pamphlets.

One small donation of thirty or forty volumes of choice books, comprising among them some rare editions of the classics, and which were sent only two days before his death, has a special interest. They were selected from the library of Dr. Vergnies, formerly of Newburyport, and he desired them to be placed in the Institute for consultation instead of general circulation; and his last signature, on the last evening of his life, was affixed to the paper in which he stated his wishes respecting their future use.

These contributions are of great value. Among them are nearly a thousand volumes of English and American History, and nearly as many more of English Literature, some of them rare and fine editions, making the library rich in those departments. A great number of all these 8,000 volumes have annotations in Judge White's own hand, giving facts respecting their authors, or criticisms of his own, with reference to notices of them elsewhere, which greatly add to their worth, and would be of great help to the student. These gifts, with donations from other patrons of the Institute, make a library which is already, in many respects, very complete, and which only needs one or two thousand volumes of modern works, judiciously selected, to supply its present deficiencies, to become what its friends desire it to be. Though dead, its generous benefactor still speaks to those who can complete the endowment which he so munificently began.

The gifts of Judge White to the Institute were not confined to contributions of books. When a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars were needed in money, he cheerfully assumed a fifteenth or twentieth part of the sum as his own proportion. It is probably just also to say, that to his good offices in rington's Occans, and other works which I imported twenty years ago or more. Athenne, Oxociouses, Ace, all amounting, perimps, to about 400 volumes; and I have enough more to cond, doubtless, to make the number exceed 5000.

In 1857 he made another contribution at the time of the removal of the natitate to its present rooms in Pharmer Hall, of which he thus speaks, July 40h:

"I have been very loss in closing my remittance of books to the Essex Institute, making in all over a thousand volumes of valuable books, amounting at a moderate estimate to between 1,300 and 1,400 deliars. With those sent before, of whose value I make no particular-estimate, the number exceeds four thousand volumes."

In addition to those, by his will, he directed that over $,000 more should be given, so that his entire contributions amount to more than eight thousand volumes, and about 1ch thousand pamphlets.

One small denation of thirty or farty volumes of choice books, comprising among them some rare editions of the classics, and which were sent only two days before his denth, has a special interest. They were selected from the brary of Dr. Vergules, formerly of Newburyport, and he desired them to be placed in the Institute for consultation instead of general circulations; and his last signature, on the last evening of his life, was affixed to the paper in which he stated his wishes respecting their future use.

These contributions are of great value. Among them are nearly as thousand volumes of Eurlish and American History, and arealy as many many of English Literature, some of them rare and that cilifons, making the library rich in those departments. A great number of all these 8,000 rolumes have annotations in Judge White's own hand, giving fleets respecting their authors, or criticisms of his own, with reference to notices of them elsewhere, which greatly add to their worth, and would be of great help to the student. These gifts, with donations from other patrons of the lastitute, make a library which is already, in many respects, very complete, and which only needs one or two thousand columes of modern works, judiciously selected, to supply its prosent deliciencies, to become what its friends desire it to be. Though dead, its generous benefactor still sprake to those who can complete the andswment which has a manificantly largue.

The gifts of Judge White to the Institute were not confined to contributions of books. When a thousand or ifficen hundred dollars were needed in money, he cheerfully assumed a fifteenth or twentieth part of the sam as his own proportion. It is probably just also to say, that to his good offices in removing questionings which had previously existed in Miss Plummer's mind in respect to the possibility of any future misappropriation of her bequests, the Athenæum is indebted for her legacy of thirty thousand dollars for the erection of Plummer Hall, which affords such ample accommodations for the library and cabinets of the Institute, and which is such an ornament and honor to the city itself.

Of Judge White's other contributions in multiplied forms of charity, it would be impossible fitly to speak. If a subscription were desirable for any benevolent purpose, he would often be the first to suggest it, and always be ready to aid it with generous gifts. Sometimes he would personally solicit donations from others; and he occasionally gives amusing descriptions of his experiences in that form of service, and of the knowledge of human nature which was thus obtained. He had the training of a New England home, in which economy is often diligently studied in order to provide liberally for the choicest education of a child, or to lavish its gifts upon some great Christian enterprise; a training which seems beautifully to blend the teaching of the multiplying of the loaves with the gathering up of the fragments. Thus he became simple in his own tastes, but prompt to meet every demand or opportunity of charity. He remembered every tie of kindred; he sent help to the poor; he stretched out his hand to society and to the world. The surplus of income beyond the 'necessary expenses of his household, during the later years of life, was generally consecrated to offices of benevolence. He was not undiscriminating in his gifts. Applications for aid which did not commend themselves to his judgment he unhesitatingly refused. But he suffered no temporary diminution of income, or pecuniary loss, to lessen his contributions to habitual dependants upon his bounty, or stint his offerings to these more sacred objects of beneficence. He cultivated the acquaintance of young men who were earnestly struggling to gain a liberal education; not only in order to aid them by pecuniary assistance, but by his sympathy and encouragement, which from one so honored was an additional inspiration.

It was his frequent custom to note down upon the checks which he drew for any special purpose, the object to which that sum of money was to be devoted; and thus his bank account, though it might furnish no record of some munificent gifts, and of numberless smaller ones which have no record upon earth, would present an unusual and a beautiful history of charity. Truly such men "make to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that, when they fail, receive them into everlasting habitations."

removing quiestionings which had previously existed in Mas Plummer's mind in respect to the possibility of any future misappropriation of her hequests, the Athenmum is indebted for her beguey of thirty thousand delians for the erection of Plummer Hall, which affords sould ample neconnectations for the 15 brary and cabinets of the Institute, and which is such an ornament and honor to the city itself.

It is scarcely necessary to say, that a man so distinguished as Judge White for intellectual power, and literary acquisitions, so steadfast in integrity, so large-minded and catholic in spirit, so prompt to recognize every claim of citizenship or charity, so steadfastly devoted to the best interests of society, must have become a beneficent power in the community, whose influence it is equally impossible to describe, and difficult to overestimate. His cooperation, or his benediction, was the first thing to be sought in every important movement for the public good. In later years, at least, "his name led all the rest." His presence was a silent rebuke to injustice, to narrowness and selfishness in their every form. He was a living embodiment of what a true public spirit can do to call forth the same generous feeling in other men, not only by his multiplied acts of benevolence, but by the perpetual influence of his character. The City was indeed bereaved when his manly form was no longer seen moving on its accustomed rounds, and his face no longer looked benignantly upon the young in their innocent sports, or gave its benediction to friends as he passed them by. Such men as he are the crown of the community in which they dwell, and when they are seen no more, we ask for it no greater blessing, than that the living who have witnessed their virtues, should study their example, and tread in their faithful steps.

There is a picture which represents a child and an aged man going down together to the river of death. The child presses forward in eager haste, with no sensation, because he has had no experience of fear. The man moves on with steady step, and serene face, bearing a lamp and a cross. There is a true serenity, a ripened beauty, in a genial, thoughtful, Christian age, which surpasses the charm of youth. It rested upon the last years of Judge White to a remarkable degree. He moved calmly on into the vale of years, amid honor and respect, encircled by the love and reverence of children and of friends. His own feeling in respect to advancing age is indicated in a letter written a number of years before his death, when his children, after a vacation, had returned to College.

"We have few hearty laughs in your absence, but these become less and less the constituents of true enjoyment as we advance in life, yet never unwelcome, unless unseasonable.—E. may miss your exciting merriment more than I do; yet I often enjoy it, without seeming to partake of it, and all the more for its reviving a recollection of early life when I entered into the spirit of social merriment as heartily as either of you can now. Different presons feel very morriment as heartily as either of you can now. Different presons feel very differently as they grow old in respect to scenes of mirth and gay amusements, according as their spirits have been more or less exposed to the chilling blasts of adversity and affliction. Some continue almost to the end of a long life with little experience of these—the circle of their early friends and intimate connections remaining to them nearly unbroken; and they may well continue to enjoy the gayeties which have seldom been interrupted by sorrow and suffering. Others are so frequently and severely bereaved as to lose all taste and relish for the amusements of life, and almost to acquire a habit of sober thought and feeling, which, to superficial observers, bears the appearance of opposition to all hilarity of soul. There are very few, I believe, however smoothly the current of life may run, whose spirits are not chastened by their experience and reflection into some degree of sobriety of manner and feeling as they advance in life, beyond what they before manifested. This at least is becoming in all, and the surest prognostic of a green old age, which is far different from a frolicksome one, and which naturally results from reflection and wisdom in the earlier periods of life."

He had himself secured the reflection, and gained the wisdom, to make his own old age green. The tree was planted by the living springs, and the freshness of its leaf did not fade. By a steadfast observance of the laws of health he regained the vigor which had been almost sacrificed by excessive study in youth, and his step was elastic and firm almost to the end. A young man who was with him on his last visit to Cambridge could scarcely keep pace with his rapid walk. His youthfulness of face was long retained. His hair was slightly silvered. When a member of one of his old Cambridge Classes said to him on his reaching his seventieth year, "you look about as you did when I recited Latin to you in College"-he writes in his diary-"A compliment indeed to my early looks." He looked genially upon youthful sports, and thankfully upon Nature's beauty, during the last months of his life, making such entries as these in his journal: "Had pleasant walks A. M. and P. M. The Common alive with Cricket players." "Took a little walk with wife in the street to and fro, to enjoy the delightful moon playing hide and seek with the passing clouds." His mind retained its noonday strength, and his pen was as active in age as in youth. On account of the intimate associations which he had held with many distinguished men, and the accuracy of his memory, he was constantly called upon during his later years to contribute his reminiscences respecting them. He was as a treasure-house from which the richest gifts could be drawn to illustrate their character, or adorn their memory. He freely met such calls as these, sometimes answering them at length, especially in respect to Professors Frisbie and Popkin, Dr. Channing, Judge Parsons, and Dr. Pearson of Andover. Many briefer Obituary notices came from his

"Passed forenoon mostly in completing my obituary Notice of Miss Higginson, whose worth and excellence as a teacher I endeavored to set forth as an example to others, as well as to make them better known and appreciated, having ever regarded her as one of the choicest blessings Salem ever had." He then speaks of her great service in the moral training of the children under her charge, and adds, "I feel her loss, and am grateful for her lessons and efforts for my own children. Her whole history, as well as ancestry, is interesting."

At a later period, he prepared his "Notices of the First Church in Salem and its Ministers from 1629 to 1853," appended to a Sermon preached at the Installation of its present minister; and his "Brief Memoir of the Plummer Family." Later still, when he was in his eighty second year, he wrote a letter in reference to the will of his friend and brother Joseph Hurd, and the final result of the trial of the case respecting it before Judge Thomas of Lowell, which was published in the Boston Daily Advertiser, May 20th, 1858, and pronounced a wonderfully condensed piece of logic. He revived his youthful friendships with beloved classmates; for it was a remarkable fact in respect to his Class, that the five who stood highest in scholarship lived to a very advanced age. They responded to his greeting with equal love; one of them, most honored, perhaps, of all, writing, "I walk in the flower garden of my twenty-one grandchildren, and two great grandchildren, and my wife leans on my arm. We study to be content, and ought to be thankful." He remembered Atkinson Academy, where he fitted for College, and sent a gift of books to it on April 1, 1860, as a token of his love. Many days in the year became anniversaries, reviving beautiful memories of pleasant events in his own history, or sacred memories of friends, earlier or later dead, which were noted in his Journal in such words as these: "Fifty-five years ago this day since my College classmate and chum, Jabez Kimball, died. A noble hearted man." "Recollections of the best hours of life" came in multiplying throngs, bringing their lamps to cheer his later days. Grandchildren already unfolding high powers in life's work, or amidst College studies, occasionally came to his home to receive his benediction, and to find new inspiration in his counsels.

But the end drew near. Only a short time after he left College, in a letter to a classmate who had met a very sad bereavement, he said, "I have often

"I feel her loss, and an grateful for her lessons and a forts for my own children. Her whole history, as well as ancestry, is interesting."

But the end drow near. Only a short time after he left College, in a let ter to a classmute with had not a very and herea-concat, he said, "I have often thought it an instance of the great goodness of God that we are, for the most part, brought to the grave by such mild and gentle gradations as to lose in ourselves all horror of death, and to render less poignant the sorrow of surviving friends. In the glow of health the thought of dying can scarcely be endured; but by a gradually wasting sickness the mind becomes familiarized to it; the love of life is kindly weakened, and death is only the last link of a long series of changes. 'Resignation gently slopes the way.'" His words were prophetic of his own experience. The way had been gradually prepared for himself by the departure of classmates, cotemporaries and friends. But the death of his daughter, Mrs. Foote, Dec. 24th, 1857, had a deeper influence than all. His other daughter, always an equally bright and welcome presence, resided in another town, and could not be constantly near him. Mrs. Foote was his daily sunshine. They interchanged visits almost every day. Equally remarkable for conversational powers, they were inspirations to each others' mind in the affectionate intercourse of father and child. But he bowed without a murmur to the will of God. On the day of her death he writes in his Journal, "So the day has passed; may the deep emotions and the tears, and profound reflections, and religious impressions, all be blessed to our own highest good." She was with him still in memory and love. He felt the truth of the following words from a classmate when speaking of his own departed daughter: "Here is a tie of the purest kind, unbroken, and to be unbroken forever, to which the heart can turn for solace, from every jar within and without. It is really treasure laid up in Heaven; a treasure of good thoughts and affections, free from all the dross of our nature, and never recurred to without gratitude to God. From the constant presence of my daughter in my heart, I feel as if she must be ever with me, whether in life or death, and a part of me always." Still life had no longer the same charm for him. Months afterward he said to a friend, "Much of the sunniness of Salem has been taken away by Mary's death;" and he felt, in the language of the classmate to whom reference has just been made, that the event had "more than half averted his eyes from the pre-accustomed sources of happiness."

During a sickness a year or two later, from which he slowly rallied, he expressed a wish that his time might then come, rather than that life should be lengthened with the probable diminution of strength. When a friend said, "There are many things which you will enjoy if you get well," he quickly answered, "O yes, I should like to see old friends again on Commencement Day," which was then close at hand. And he did see them again. He clung to them till

I should like to see old friends again on Connecurrant Day," which was then close at hand. And he did see them again. He clong to them till the pulse beat no longer. But the heavens had been more distinctly revealed by his daughter's death, and it was the unconscious influence of this event, perhaps, rather than the dread of increasing weakness, that made him more ready to unloose the clasp of earthly hands.

When the last weeks and days came, "Resignation gently sloped the way." He made every disposition of his worldly affairs with perfect calmness and clearness of mind. He recalled all his dear ones and friends, and set apart tokens of love for each and all. He was fully alive to the best interests of the world, and the welfare of country. He cordially welcomed friends to his chamber. His messages of love were more tender than ever. He listened to favorite passages of Scripture, read by son or daughter, with deep emotion. As the fatal disease went on he would write in his diary, "Feel no better; yet thankful for the many mercies I enjoy." Many men have been equally serene. More serene no man could be. He rested upon no theory or hope of his own, not relying even upon the thought that he should meet his beloved ones again. He lay like a little child in his father's hand, repeating oft, or listening to the words of his favorite hymn:

"My God, I thank thee; may no thought E'er deem thy chastisements severe."

That hymn embodied his own religious life. In youth, as he walked around his father's farm, amid the beauty of Nature which then sank into his heart, he learned to feel the truth of the words:

"Thy mercy bids all nature bloom;
The sun shines bright, and man is gay."

Amidst the chastenings of many a deep experience he learned equally to feel the truth of those other lines:

"Thine equal mercy spreads the gloom Which darkens o'er my little day," until those words "Thine equal mercy," were always hymning themselves in his heart, or ready to drop from his lips.

Except a request for water, these were his last words. He had been able to sit in his chair till the last day. On that morning, yielding to his physician's advice, he remained in bed, with wife and children and grandchildren about him, to accompany him to the river's side. He heard the tidings of the death of Judge Shaw, less than an hour before his own departure, and said, "It is a good time." He had learned long ago to bear the cross. The lamp was in his hand as he stepped into the river's brink. And so he fell asleep, with a smile upon his countenance, "and soon," in the words of filial piety watching his ascension, "his face shone as if it had been the face of an angel." He died March 30th, 1861, aged 84 years, 9 months, and 23 days. His funeral was at the First Church, April 2nd, and his body was laid in the Cemetery of Harmony Grove.

In attempting to delineate the features of his character, it is difficult fully to picture the impressions which they made. There were strong elements in his nature which it may have required a struggle to discipline in earlier days. He was capable of intense moral indignation at injustice, or narrowness, or meanness, in their every form. He had the power of denouncing them in words that pierced like swords. Perhaps if he had remained in public life, he would have been too honest and outspoken to retain uninterrupted favor, though he might have always commanded the most absolute respect and confidence. But if there were struggles in earlier life, his last days only exhibited the victory. There seemed to be a rare mental and moral balance in his character. No man left the impression of a more absolute integrity. No injustice had a place in his heart. Sinister purposes and aims would have shrunk before his uprightness. Indeed, he was one of those whose "sphere" called out the best thoughts from other minds, and the noblest traits in their character, and unconsciously constrained other souls to put on their best robes in his presence. He was a man of childlike simplicity. With characteristic modesty he never displayed his wealth of literary acquisitions until called upon to impart of his ample store; and then he opened all his treasures as freely as he opened his hand to bestow his gifts of charity. The record of his life is a record of good deeds. Perhaps he may have seemed reserved to those who knew him but slightly. He never seemed so to the children whom he would stop to greet in his walks, and to cheer with kindly words, or to the children who were visitors at his home. He never seemed so to friends. The sunshine of his look fell upon them with no eclipse. No other word than benignity can express the aspect which his countenance wore for them. The tree "bore twelve manner of fruits," because its roots were fed from the river of life. A devout attendant at church, when both his theological attainments and his christian experience made it far more fitting for him to preach than to listen; an habitual student of the Scriptures from his youth; thoughtful, reverent always; sitting daily at his Master's feet, asking the guidance of his Father's hand, he lived in trust and faith, till faith was changed to sight.

Few men have had more honorable tributes of respect and love than were spontaneously offered to his memory. One friend writes, "His presence al-his ascension, "his face shone as if it had been the face of an angel." He died March 30th, 1861, aged 84 years, 9 mooths, and 23 days. His funeral was at the First Church, April 2nd, and his body was laid in the Cometery of Harmony Grove.

Fow men lave had more honorable tributes of respect and love than were spontaneously offered to his memory. One friend writes, "The presence a ways seemed to me like a benediction, and it is no exaggeration to say, that an atmosphere of goodness ever surrounded him, which I always felt whenever I was fortunate enough to be near him." Another says, "I remember well the veneration with which I looked upon him more than twenty years ago, and from that day to the last time I met him, I have looked upon him as an example to his race." These were men many years vounger than himself. who more nearly approached his own age offered similar tributes. One speaks of his "gratitude for the indulgence exhibited by his tutor more than sixty years before, and his admiration for the faithfulness of the Judge." Another quotes the opinion which he had heard expressed by a friend before his own personal acquaintance, "That Judge White was one of the most perfect specimens of humanity he had known," and then adds, "When I came to know him myself, I could easily understand the grounds of such an opinion. When I was with him I always felt myself under an attractive influence which I had neither the disposition, nor the ability to resist. His excellent sense and varied information, and fine colloquial powers, and genial, generous spirit, always acted as a charm upon me." And a most beloved classmate writes, "I have now lost my warm-hearted and affectionate correspondent, whose purity and intelligence were a constant refreshment to think of, and whose tastes and opinions were more in sympathy with my own than those of any other man of my time. In many respects I have seen no person like him, no person so unvarying for so long a life, the delicacy and susceptibility of his affections continuing the same from my first acquaintance with him. The remembrance of him must be a store of sacred thoughts, as well as of honorable and wise principles to his descendants. It will be to me while I live. Let those who were nearest to him know how deeply I respected and loved him, and how truly through our long lives, the intercourse between us, which began in these sentiments, was without jar, or shadow to the end."

There were very many kindred voices, but all spoke in the same tone, and between their testimonies, there was no "jar."

A more faithful or kinder parishioner no minister ever had. A truer or more honored friend we have never known. It is a blessing to recall his memory, though it renews the grief for his loss, and compels those who loved him, in his own chosen words respecting President Willard, "to weep most of all that they shall see his face no more."

PRESIDENT MUNROE IN SALEM. BY B. F. BROWNE.

In that part of the extracts from Mr. Rantoul's Diary published on page 31 of the last number of these Collections, in noticing the attention paid to President Munroe, he says, "I do not recollect that the President received any particular attention in Salem." In this, his recollection is at fault. When it was understood that the President would visit Salem on his way east, a meeting of the citizens was called, and a Committee com-

Joseph Story, Hon. John Pickering, Hon. Nath'l Bowditch, Joseph White, Esq., David Cummins, Esq, Willard Peele, Esq, and Joseph Winn, Esq. were chosen and empowered to make all the necessary arrangements for his reception. Five of the gentlemen were of the Old Federal Party. The Committee entered on the subject earnestly and appointed six Marshals, three from each party, viz: Major James Charles King, Gen'l David Putnam, Major Edward S. Lang, Major Samuel W. Phelps, Captain John Stone and John W. Treadwell. The President arrived at Marblehead and received the most gratifying attentions from the people there, and came to Salem by the Marblehead road, in the afternoon of Tuesday July (8th) 6th, 1817. He was met at the lines by the Selectmen of Salem, the Committee of Arrangements and a large number of our citizens. He was received under a National Salute of 19 guns from Col. Russell's Artillery. He was then taken under escort of Major Peabody's Battalion of Cavalry and proceeded in his carriage through Market, (now Central) Essex, Court, (now Washington,) Marlborough, (now part of Federal,) Federal and Boston Streets to the western part of Essex Street. A procession of citizens awaited him, near Munroe Street, which has since that time been called by his name. The children of the Town were arranged on each side of Essex Street. A Battalion composed of the Cadets, Salem Light Infantry, and Mechanic Light Infantry, commanded by Capt. White, headed the procession. When it passed through the uncovered children, they greeted the President and his suite, with cheers and waving of handkerchiefs, and showered garlands upon him. When posed of the Hon. Benjn. Piekman, Jr., Hon. the procession arrived at the Essex Coffee

PRESIDENT MUNROE IN SALEM

In that part of the extracts from Mr. Rantoul's Diary published on page 21 of the last number of these Collections, in noticing the attention puld to President Munroe, be mys, "I do not recollect that the President received any particular attention is Salem." in this, his recollection is at fault. When it was understood that the President would visit Salem on his way cast, a meeting of the citizens was called, and a Committee com-

House, (now the Essex House) it halted and the President was addressed by the Hon. Mr. Pickman, Chairman of the Committee. After resting here awhile, he was escorted to the Town Hall, (then first opened for public use,) by the Battallion of Light Infantry, where the Civil Authorities and citizens were introduced to him. From thence he proceeded in his carriage to the common, and reviewed the troops, viz: The Battalion of Cavalry, the Regiment of Artillery, the Cadets and the Salem Regiment. After the review, with which he expressed himself highly pleased, he went to his quarters at the Essex House and dined with the Committee of Arrangements. In the evening he was present at a Concert in the Town Hall, where about 1000 Ladies and Gentlemen were assembled. The Hall was splendidly decorated with flags, drapery, and various devices and inottos in his honor, and was most brilliantly illuminated. The weather was most propitious and nothing marred the proceedings of the day.

On Wednesday, he visited the Fort and the Female Asylum, and partook of a collation at the Hon. Mr. Silsbee's; then visited the Museum and the Atheneum and dined with a large party at the Hon. B.W.Crowninshield's, and in the evening attended a brilliant Assembly at Judge Story's. On Thursday morning he breakfasted at Mr. Thorndike's at Beverly, and in the evening attended a large and brilliant party at Stephen White, Esqr's. The next morning, he proceeded on his tour to the Eastward.

MR. RANTOUL'S CONNEXION WITH TOWN AND PAROCHIAL AFFAIRS. —HIS VIEWS OF RELIGION

Concluded from the February Number.

As soon as I became entitled to vote, I began to attend the town meetings, and to ininterest myself in town and state affairs, taking an active and at some periods of my life an influential part. For about forty years, there was no subject of much interest before the town, upon which I did not take a decided course. The improvement of the existing roads, and the location of new ones, was a special subject of my attention. These changes have been very great since the commencement of the present century, and in almost all of them I engaged heartily.

Amongst these changes were the widening and straightening of the road from Grover's Hollow in Beverly to Esty's Tavern and the Meeting House in Middleton, - opposed by North Beverly on the ground that it would divert much of the country travel from that part of the town, - and the locating of the Rial: Side Road, to which I gave much attention from 1803 to 1811, when it was finally located, four rods wide. THIS VIEWS OF RELIGIOS Concluded from the Procusey Number.

As soon as I become autitled to vote, I begen to attend the town meetings, and so innierest myself in town and state affairs, aking an active and at some parieds of any life an influential part. For about farty years, there was no subject of much interest before the town, upon which I did not take a decided course. The improvement of the coisting roads, and the fecation of new case, was a special subject of my attention. These changes have been very great since the commencement of the present century, and in almost all of them I engaged heartily.

Amongst these changes were the varienting and straightening of the road from Grover's Hollow in Bererly to Esty's Tarern and the Meeting House in Middleton,—appeared by diver much of the country travel from that the town,—and the meeting of the Rial Side Road, to which I gave much attention from teach to 1811, when it one doubt attention from 1803 to 1811, when it one doubt attention from 1803 to 1811, when it one doubt attention to the four rods wide. During this period was avery nawn in the Country way sound expenses being paid, but nothing more. I was employed by the town and actively engaged in procuring the improvement of the Road from the North Meeting House in Beverly to the Meeting House in Topsfield. The way between these points was narrow, crooked and circuitous. I was one of the representatives of the Town at the widening and straightening of the Road leading from the corner of Dodge and Cabot Streets to Essex in 1806, and also on the widening and straightening of the Road from First Parish Meeting House to Manchester line, at a later time. I was one of the Town's Committee for opposing the alterations of the Road leading from the First Parish Meeting House to Essex, which was strenuously urged by Essex and opposed by Beverly, because it was proposed to go over two high hills in Beverly and Wenham, the steepness of which would make the road impracticable for heavy teams, notwithstanding the saving in distance Road was however located over Rubly Hill and the anticipated result has followed. I was young, ardent and sanguine and, in prosecuting these measures, offended many whose feelings were as strongly enlisted against, as mine were for them.

I was actively engaged in procuring the location of Lothrop Street. * * For several months previous to October 1851, I gave much effort and labor to aid the selectmen, who, by vote of the Town, petitioned the County Commissioners to lay out a new Street parallel to Cabot Street, from Manasseh Trask's house on that Street and near the entrance of Colon Street, south westerly to the India Rubber Factory near Ezra Batchelder's house. This street is about a mile in length, and is laid out four rods wide and nearly straight. I think it will contribute much to the growth of the town in population and business, and will give to the village a degree of symmetry, since it will then have three wide parallel streets of about a mile in length, running through its whole extent. These will be crossed by numerous streets. I am apprehensive that the latter will generally be to narrow, as most of the openings on Cabot Street are now but narrow courts, which cannot be conveniently widened, but will be extended to the New Streets. The location of this as a County Road was recorded by the Commissioners in December 1851. I have staked out a street that capacity, in locating a new piece of road from Cabot Street over my land on Stephens's, now Milton Hill, to the New Road, and ens' house to Cabot Street, near the three named it Milton Street. On the 13th of March, 1854, the annual town meeting was held, but, having previously declined being a candidate for any town office, I did not attend. This, I believe, is only the second time that I have been absent from the annual town meeting since I was twenty one years of age. I have attended nearly every town meeting during that time. This finishes my connexion with town affairs, which began in 1799, a period of about fifty five years.

In the Spring of the year 1816, I attended the School Committee in visiting most of the public schools of the Town. I was not then a member of the Committee, but undertook this voluntary service with a view of acquiring a knowledge of the state of the Schools and of encouraging, by my example, a disposition to visit them on the part of others. Previously to 1816, I had taken an interest in the schools and had occasionally visited them with Abiel Abbot, Chairman of the Committee, but I did not give any systematic attention to them, until that year. I was chosen a member of the Committee in 1818. Since that time I have made it a special duty to visit the schools. I have been re-elected, with the exception of one or two years, to this time. Rev. Abiel Abbot served as chairman from 1804 to 1828, a period of twenty-four years, during which the schools rose from a state of great depression to a very fair standing. Rev. C.

I served as one of the prudential Committee of the Grammar School District in 1825, 26 and 27, and had much labor and care in commencing the District School in 1825 and its continuance after-Rufus Putnam kept the School at its commencement and has since become a very distinguished instructor in Salem. 000 I have, within the year previous to this time, [March 1849] visited all the district schools in the town, three times and several of them more, including the Spring examinations, all of which I have attended. I have made a greater effort the past year, under the impression that I have arrived at that age when I should feel that my time is short, and should do what ever belongs to me to do, quickly. I think that the common schools of this town have risen very considerably during my recollection of them and that the last examinations justify the opinion that they are in a progressive state of improvement. The improvement in School Houses has been very manifest. Every School House has been either rebuilt or remodeled. In the South District there have been two new Houses. Briscoe Hall has been remodeled and is now well fitted for three schools of different grades. July 1849, I have again visited all the public schools in town, of which there are fourteen now in operation. In addition to these are the Beverly Academy with forty pupils and several schools for On the 13th of March, 1854, the annual terms meeting was held, but, having previously declined being a candidate for any town office, I did not attend. "This lake lies about twenty miles to the northeast of Boston. It has a small island in the middle of it, is about a mile long and forty feet deep, and is surrounded by hills of sand and gravel, from forty to a hundred feet high. The water is always clear and pure, and the bottom covered with white quartzose sand. It is fed by springs, and receives no mud from any stream flowing into it; but at the lower extremity a small brook of transparent water flows out. In some parts, however, there must, I presume, be a soft and muddy bottom, as it is inhabited by eels, as well as by pickerel and perch. Mr. Oakes had recently received a present of a snapping turtle weighing 25 lbs., taken from the lake.

"Sir Francis Head, in his "Emigrant," 1846, has attributed the durability of the Wenham Lake ice, or its power of resisting liquefaction, to the intense cold of a North American winter. It is perfectly true that this ice does not melt so fast as English ice; but the cause of this phenomenon is, I believe, very different from that assigned for it by the late governor of Upper Canada. "People in England," he says, "are prone to think that ice is ice; but the truth is, that the temperature of 32° Fahrenheit, that at which water freezes, is only the commencement of an operation that is almost infinite; for after its congelation, water is as competent to continue to receive cold, as it was when it was The application of cold to a block of ice does not, as in the case of heat, applied beneath boiling water, cause what is added at one end to fly out at the other: but, on the contrary, the extra cold is added to and retained by the mass, and thus the temperature of the ice falls with the temperature of the air, until in Lower Canada it occasionally sinks to 40° below zero, or 72° below the temperature of ice just congealed. It is evident, therefore, that if two ice-houses were to be filled, the one with Canada ice, and the other with English ice, the difference between the quantity of cold stored up in each would be as appreciable as the difference between a cellar full of gold and a cellar full of copper; that is to say, a cubic foot of Lower Canada ice is infinitely more valuable, or, in other words, it contains infinitely more cold, than a cubic foot of Upper Canada ice, which to life in a community much better taught

again contains more cold than a cubic foot of Wenham ice, which contains infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of English ice; and thus, although each of these four cubic feet of ice has precisely the same shape, they each, as summer approaches, diminish in value; that is to say, they each gradually lose a portion of their cold, until, long before the Lower Canada ice has melted, the English ice has been converted into lukewarm water.

"There can be no doubt that where an intense frost gives rise to a great thickness of ice, permitting large cubic masses to be obtained after the superficial and porous ice has been planed off, a great advantage is afforded to the American ice merchant, and the low temperature acquired by the mass must prevent it from melting so readily when the hot season comes on, since it has first to be warmed up to 32° Fahrenheit, before it can begin to melt. Nevertheless, each fragment of ice, when removed from the store-house, very soon acquires the temperature of 32° Fahrenheit, and yet when a lump of Wenham ice has been brought to England, it does not melt by any means so readily as a similar lump of common English ice. Mr. Faraday tells me that Wenham Lake Ice is exceedingly pure, being both free from air-bubbles and from salts. The presence of the first makes it extremely difficult to succeed in making a lens of English ice which will concentrate the solar rays and readily fire gunpowder, whereas nothing is easier than to perform this singular feat of igniting a combustible body by the aid of a frozen mass, if Wenham ice be employed.

"The absence of salts conduces greatly to the permanence of the ice, for where water is so frozen that the salts expelled are still contained in air-cavities and cracks, or form thin films between the layers of the ice, these entangled salts cause the ice to melt at a lower temperature than 32°, and the liquelied portions give rise to streams and currents within the body of the ice, which rapidly carry heat to the interior. The mass then goes on thawing within as well as without, and at temperatures below 32°; whereas pure and compact Wenham ice can only thaw at 32°, and only on the outside of the mass."

I walked to and from this school; about five miles in the whole. a a William Burley gave, by will, to the towns of Ipswich and Beverly $50 per year each for ten years, to be applied for the instruction of poor children in reading and the principles of the Christian Religion. He died Dec. 22, 1822, aged 72 years. In 1824, a committee was appointed, of which I was chairman, to apply this legacy. The plan adopted was to find out fifty poor children and induce their parents to send them to such a school for little children in the neighborhood as they might choose, the committee paying one dollar for one quarter's schooling of each child. School mistresses whose terms were higher, invariably took such poor children as came to them, at the fixed price, to favor this charity. The manner in which this money was employed led to no invidious distinctions, as would have been the case if separate schools had been established with it. The town of Ipswich received at once the whole $500 and, with some other monies, established a permanent fund, the income of which is to be applied to this same object in perpetuity. 200 In February, 1833, a private school was projected and a number of persons associated themselves together, bought a lot upon Washington Street and built a School House thereon. The land and building cost nearly one thousand dollars. The associates appointed a committee to manage the school, and of this I was chairman. When I was quite a child, of only three or four years, I was sent to my grandmother's, to get from her garden the first blooming tulips and such other flowers as could be found. With these I was led about the streets to be caressed by passing friends. As I grew older, I was allowed to visit those places of amusement where the young assembled to enjoy their playfulness. These were, for the children from the East end of the town of Salem, on the neck, at what was then called the Old Fort, now Fort Pickering, and what was then called the new Fort, and also sometimes at an old Fortification called Juniper Fort. At these places there were cake, candy and other articles of refreshment for sale, of which the children were large purchasers and consumers. Amongst the larger boys, there were various games such as pitching coppers, throwing props, jumping, wrestling &c. As my boyhood advanced, I visited places at a greater distance from home, and more particularly connected with other parts of the town. These were, on the Danvers Road, Frye's tavern and the Bell tavern, - in South Salem. at Osgood's and Castle Hill, and still further off, Putnam's tavern at Danvers Plains. At these places the amusements were more rough and sometimes indecorous. There was the negro fiddler; there was dancing by white boys and girls and by colored boys and girls. I never knew the whites and blacks to intermix in dancing, though the fiddler was a negro, in almost all cases. Gambling, was much practiced. Drinking of egg-pop, was practiced at Danvers Plains, which was more of a resort for adult persons. the amusements of boys and girls were in the open air. The dancing was generally in doors, but not in private, as the doors and windows were all open. In these scenes

"romp-loving miss Is hauled about, in gallantry robust."

The manners of the times of my boyhood are now to be known only from history. Coarse and vulgar dissipation is carried on now, if at all, more privately than at that I wish I could believe that it is only the beautiful flowers, the simple cake, the harmless drinks and the pleasant social intercourse of the young which have come down to our day, and that everything connected with Election Day which was objectionable has fallen into disuse. This was the period for changing from Winter to Summer clothing, so that among other sources of enjoyment, was the appearance of a new suit of clothes. The longest remembered pleasures of the day with me are the new clothes, the bunch of flowers, the cake and the promenade. I never had a very strong desire for The Election recreations, in amusements. my boyhood, were usually continued for two days in succession, and in some places, for four successive days, the people would congregate and only finish them with the end of the week. At all the schools there was a vacation of one or two days, and at some of four days. Gaming and drinking to excess of various intoxicating drinks were the vices which most contaminated the young on these with props, dice, cards and other implements, occasions, and I think I see an improvement in these respects since I have observed the beer, punch, flip, toddy and other liquors, state of society. On this very day, about and the eating of articles of food more or one hundred boys and girls are assembled less substantial, was common. Horse-racing within a few rods of my dwelling, where

From the time of my commencing business in Beverly in 1796, until the introduction of hose and other machinery, and of Fire Departments, for the extinguishment of fires, it was my invariable practice, unless prevented by sickness, on an alarm of fire either in this town or in Salem, by night or by day, be the weather what it might, with as much speed as was practicable, to take my fire buckets and proceed to the scene of devastation. It was then the prevalent opinion that it was a duty incumbent upon all able-bodied men so to do. This opinion had a favorable moral influence upon the mass of the community, promoting a generous desire to aid one another by personal efforts and sacrifices. The shifting of this obligation to repair to and aid in extinguishing fires, to a few persons appointed for the purpose, began June 18th, 1825, when an act was passed authorizing the City of Boston to establish a fire department. Whether the gain or the loss from this change predominates, I do not feel ready to say. The division of labor; the increase of refinement; the introduction of machinery; the general practice of insurance against fire, and other social changes consequent upon the increase of wealth, have led to a change in the state of opinion on this subject and to some diminution of vigilance, some frauds in insurance transactions, some reserve and forbearance of personal aid, and some lessening of sympathy

> A very strict regard for order is useful, but yet, in the exercise of a sound, discriminating judgment, an occasional departure from strict rules is right, proper and commendable. Let such departures, however, be infrequent and fully justified by the occasion, - not from frivolous considerations. There is no judgment to be entertained with greater caution, than when exercised in regard to the dispensing with well established rules of conduct. Generally the temptation is all on one side, and reasons for yielding to it will present themselves much more readily than those of an opposite tendency. Against this the power of settled habit is a great security. But system sometimes costs more than it is worth. It is important to observe rules, yet it is hardly less important to be able to break them, upon a right occasion.

> > "The man who never breaks a rule. Is little better than a fool."

One who regulates his life by fixed principles of honor and religion will, whatever may be his outer circumstances, have the unspeakable comfort and advantage of his own self approbation. Nehemiah, the governor of Jerusalem, said, when the men of property had done wrong by excessive usury in their transactions with their poorer brethren, "Then I consulted with myself," instead of consulting the nobles and rulers, "And I set a great assembly against them." This doctrine of self-consultation is not so generally regarded as it ought to be. To relieve ourthey are amusing thomselves with singing, danoing and other entertanments. "Then its the moles and quiets," instead of commiing the moles and quiets, "And I are a great commity against them." This does tring of selb-consultation is not as generally regarded as it ought to be. To relieve one selves of responsibility, we frequently go to others, when it is very clear that we ought to rely upon ourselves. The spirit of independence and the habit of acting on my own impressions was fully developed in me by my early education, experience and observation of life, and I think the same characteristics have continued to mark my course thus far. By this, no doubt, I have fallen into many errors which might have been avoided by seeking the counsel of others better informed and wiser than myself, but at the same time I think it is much better thus to suffer, than to put in jeopardy one's independence, selfreliance, firmness and energy of action. These should all be strictly guarded, and may be without refusing the counsel of others. But my continual jealousy of the interference of others has led me to the extreme of caution.

After all, self-reliance is the main spring of successful action - without it one will be tame, wavering and inefficient. He may not be vicious, but he is only negatively virtuous. He may avoid doing wrong but he will be weak and slow in doing right. Better stand alone, even if it requires great effort, than lean upon another. In the one case action will be a relief, but in the other a burthen. When one feels that he alone must think, resolve and act, he then may rely upon that inspiration from above which, under other circumstances, he has no right to expect. "Yet I am not alone because the Father is with me," was the saying of him who was called to endure the greatest sufferings, in testimony of his fidelity to his mission of mercy and beneficence to our .ace. An indecisive character rarely attains to eminence in anything. Habits of punctucouragement, and in short to be in earnest about every worthy object, great or small,these are the sure means of success. Never affect depreciation of your calling nor of any object which you think it right to attend to. If the object is unworthy your attention, abandon it; if it is worthy, make it honorable to you, by your fidelity in discharging its claims.

My connexion with the business of the First Parish and the First Church in Beverly has been as continuous as with the business of the town. I began to attend Parish Meetings as soon as I was old enough to vote. * * June 14th, 1802, Mr. Mc Kean addressed a letter to the parish committee informing them that he had been elected President of Bowdoin College, at Brunswick in Maine, and that he was disposed to accept the office, and desired them to call a parish meeting to act on his request for a dismission. Such a meeting was accordingly held, June 21st, and after the usual preliminary measures, the request was granted, to take effect August 23d. There was mutual good feeling in regard to this separation. Soon after the Parish became agitated with the questions of a division of the parish and the resettlement of a minister. With both these subjects I soon became zealously involved. A meeting was called, October 25th, 1802, to act on the petition of John Dike, Thomas Appleton, Daniel Herrick and others, requesting that they, with such others as might join them, might be set off and incorporated into a Religious Society. Jan'y 29th, 1803, a meeting was held, on an order of notice from the General Court issued upon a similar ality, order and diligence, - the determination petition, and the vote stood 83 year and 117 to concentrate the mind and powers on one ob- nays, indicating a very large attendance. ject at a time, to persevere under every dis- Subsequently a vote was passed consenting liberty of changing from one to the other at the expiration of six months. A large committee was chosen to draft a memorial to the Court upon the subject of "open doors," as it was then popularly called, and Thomas Stephens, John Dyson and I were appointed a committee to present this memorial and attend to the interests of the Parish at the General Court. This was my first appointment to any office by the Parish. Being then strongly impressed with the opinion that the support of public worship should be by a compulsory tax on all members of the community, I strenuously opposed the introduction of a principle into the relation of the new and the old parishes, which, in my view, would tend to the total abolishment of the then existing laws of the Commonwealth for the support of the public institutions of Religion. That principle of compulsory support has gradually yielded to the introduction of the principle of the voluntary support of public worship, and while this change has been going on in the public mind for the last half century, I have, however reluctantly for many years, at last come to the conclusion that the voluntary support of Religion is the true ground upon which it ought to rest. Its institutions should be totally disconnected with the Government and left to be sustained entirely by the free will of the people. I maintained the conservative ground honestly and with much zeal, so long as it appeared to be of any use. My opinion was overwhelmed before it was changed. During

They preferred the preaching of Daniel Hopkins and Joshua Spaulding of Salem, to that of Mr. Me-Kean, and some of the leaders of this party occasionally went to Salem to enjoy what they considered sounder preaching than that of the minister of their own parish. This course on the part of the Strict Calvinists had prepared the way for a division of the Parish which was hastened by the dismissal of Mr. McKean, and immediately after that event, measures were set on foot for the establishment of a new religious society. A Baptist Society had been previously organized and had built a meeting house, about After Mr. McKean removed to Brunswick he was esteemed as belonging to the Orthodox part of the Congregational Denomination and was spoken more kindly of by those here who, while he was with them, spoke lightly of him as a preacher. While here, he was universally esteemed for his social qualities and his excellent character.

Before Abiel Abbot was settled, the third Congregational Society, now called the Dane Street Church, was organized and Joseph Emerson ordained. Those who preferred the more decided Calvinistic doctrines joined the new society and left the moderates as well as the liberals with Mr. Abbot. He probably had changed his views in regard to several doctrines and especially that of the Trinity, since entering the ministry, but he had not become sufficiently grounded in new views of doctrine to make them a cause of separation from what is now called Orthodoxy, Joseph McKean's ministry, there was a par- in his interchanges with neighboring ministy who were dissatisfied with his preaching, ters. He strove much to keep up this ministerial intercourse, even after the Orthodox had become much disinclined thereto. He refrained until near the end of his ministry, from any explicit public denial of the doctrine of the trinity. In 1823, almost twenty years after his settlement, he was invited to join in council at the settlement of Ebenezer Poor, in the precinct of Salem and Beverly, commonly called the Upper Parish. Most of the members of the council were orthodox, and some active persons among them interested themselves to prevent Mr. Abbot's having a prominent part in the ordination. This occasioned some discussion in council and some excitement among the members of the parish who were, for the most part, strongly attached to him. He was finally appointed to make the ordaining prayer. I attended as a delegate from the church and my feelings were somewhat excited by this occurrence. On my return it was concluded that an account of the proceedings at this ordination should be submitted to the public, through the newspapers. An account was accordingly drawn up, by Bernard Whitman, who was then studying divinity with Dr. Abbot, and myself, and published in the Salem Gazette. This drew out a reply and led to the publishing of several articles written by Mr. Whitman, myself and others on one side, and David Oliphant, minister of the Dane Street church, James Appleton of Marblehead and others on the other side. All these appeared in the Salem Gazette for October, November, and December 1823, and were reprinted in a pamphlet in 1824, as was supposed by James Appleton. Even this public discussion did not induce Dr. Abbot to take very decided and explicit ground, in his own parish, in regard to the party lines drawn in the Congregational churches. I then thought, and so advised him, that it was then time for bim to make an explicit avowal of his opinions. But he replied that he knew the character of his parishioners better than any one else, and that knowledge would be his guide. During the whole period of his ministry I took an active part in the affairs of the Parish and of the church. On the 4th of March 1812 Thomas Davis and I were chosen Deacons of the church. Deacon Benjamin Cleaves had died, August 16th, 1808, at the great age of about eighty-seven. His place had not been supplied and Deacon Robert Roundy had died, Jan'y 5th 1812, aged eighty-nine years, so the office was entirely vacant at the time of our election.

[He was chosen a member of the standing committee for managing the prudential affairs of the Parish, with Joseph Wood and Andrew Obear, in 1803, and succeeded Joseph Wood, at his decease in 1808, as Parish Clerk. He continued to fill all these offices for life. R. S. R.]

In 1810, Hannah Hill and Joanna B. Prince, afterwards wife of Ebenezer Everett of Brunswick, Maine, established a Sunday School, with a view of benefiting the poor children in their immediate neighborhood. Their school was kept in a chamber in Mrs. Joanna Prince's house, on the corner of Davis and Front streets. My wife and I visited the school, and on July 18th, 1811, I procured a donation of six Bibles and six Testaments from the Bible Society of Salem and its vicinity, of which I was then a manager, and sent them with a letter commending this effort in the cause of Religion. The school was continued for several years, when it was removed to the First Parish Meeting House, and other females took part in its instruction. It was still without systematic organization, and without any particular connexion with the minister or parish, except what grew out of its being kept in the Meeting-House. Some children belonging to other societies attended before and after its removal thither. Dr. Abbot at length felt that it was proper for him to take some cognizance of the School. The Westminster Shorter Catechism had been considerably used there and, to do away with the necessity of its continued use, he published, in 1822, a short catechism, called the Parents' Assistant and Sunday School Book, and, about the same time, commenced the organization of a Sunday School exclusively appertaining to his society. Of this I became superintendent, in the summer of 1822 and, with his aid, organized the school, which was very large, in forty classes, with forty-four teachers and about two hundred and fourteen children.*

They conceived the generous purpose of gathering them together, as Robert Raikes had done in the cities of England, and giving them a chance to taste the bread of life, with at least an immunity from evil for a part of the day. The spirit of the movement was purely and signally benevolent. It is curious to observe how closely this movement resembles that now going on under the name of "Children's Aid Societies," and further to note the fact, not seemingly recognized by the speakers on this occasion, that the Raikes and Hill movement addressed itself solely to those who were without home and church and school influences; while Sunday Schools now-a-days, having become nurseries of the denominational churches, and being frequented by the well-to-do, well-dressed children of those who could teach morals and faith as well at home that very dangerous class of neglected children are, by the meanness of their dress, the roughness of their manners, the scantiness of their education, practically excluded. There is room, then, for other Hills and Princes, nay, as much need of them as ever.

Dr. A. P. Peabody, lately made Plummer Professor at Cambridge, and a graduate of Hannah Hill's school, stated that he was able before her death to make partial return to her of what he owed her. She became possessed of the idea of reading the New Testament in its original tongue; and Dr. Peabody, while at College, devoted a vacation to instructing this somewhat aged pupil, his quondam teacher, in the rudiments of Greek. He said she learned it as if by inspiration, and he had the pleasure, in the course of a few months, of hearing her read understandingly the glowing pages, as they were written by witnesses of the scenes they portray."

My native State, Massachusetts, was settled by the sect who, in England, were called Puritans. They were rigid and austere of manners and Calvinistic in their belief. thought it their duty to protect and preserve what they called Orthodoxy, by such guards and restraints as seemed to them necessary to attain their object. But notwithstanding all restraints, such have been the progress and freedom of religious inquiry that Unitarian principles obtain more generally in Massachusetts than in any other part of the United States. It is but of late, say within fifteen years, that these sentiments have been openly avowed. They long existed in the minds of many serious and intelligent persons, who, from prudence or defect of moral courage, refrained from communicating them.

Happily the time has now arrived when an open avowal of Unitarianism, in many parts of New England, does not lessen respect for character, nor influence in society. Prejudice gradually yields to rational inquiry, and the change of opinion is as rapid as is desirable, considering the danger, to which we are all liable, of running from one extreme to its opposite. The Congregational Clergy and other influential persons in the City of Boston, have taken the lead in producing this change. The Christian lives of these men have secured to their opinions that confidence which, among the less informed, is so necessary to insure them a fair examination and comparison with the Scriptures. To call such men Deists and Infidels is of no avail, while the whole tenor of their conduct exemplifies those virtues which belong to the real disciple of Christ. Our College at Cambridge has contributed largely to the progress of liberal and enlightened opinions in theology.

SOME ACCOUNT OF HOUSES AND OTHER BUILDINGS IN SALEM, FROM A MANUSCRIPT OF THE LATE COL. BENJ. PICKMAN.

COMMUNICATED BY GEO. B, LORING. WITH NOTES.

Col. Benj. Pickman, the author of the following sketches, was born in Salem in 1741, and died in 1819. He was intimately connected with the history of the town, held important town offices, and was especially fond of that antiquarian research, which he exercised in obtaining these facts recorded in his manuscripts. It has been thought best to give the account in the author's own words, from the commencement.

"Salem, 2 September 1793. I am about to write the history of the Town of Salem; and shall do it by describing the Houses and Streets, with the present and former inhabitants. I shall begin with that street in which I live;" (Essex St. in the Pickman house, next west of the East India Marine building) "which was paved last year, partly by subscription and partly by the Town. The town allowed one thousand dollars, and some persons inhabiting the street six hundred dollars; the author of this history subscribing seventy-seven dollars.

1. The first house in the street, as you come from the west end of the town, is a Brick store built in 1786, by Henry Rust and Benj. Browne; on this spot farmerly stood the Court House, which was built in 1718 and pulled down in 1785.

Note. This building was taken down when the Eastern railroad tunnel was built in 1839. Its northern end was occupied by Mr. Caleb Webster, hatter; and near its northwestern corner stood the old Town Pump, immortalized by Hawthorne

2. The next house is the meeting-house in which officiates the Rev'd John Prince, graduated in 1776: this is the third meeting-house which has stood on the same spot; the first meeting-house in Salem was built here, which is a sufficient proof that this was the first settled part of the town.

Note. The fourth meeting-house on the same site is the present building corner of Washington and Essex Streets.

3. The next house is owned and inhabited by Mr. Samuel Gray, merchant; was bought of Nathan Goodale, Esq., in 1788; was built by Col. William Browne in 1763, for his mother, Mrs. Sargent, widow of Col.

3. The next bouse is ewapd and indebted by Mr. Sannel Gray, merchant; on bought of Sathan Coolabe, hepe in 1788 was built by Col. William Browns in 1768. For his neither, Mrs. Sargent, which of Col.

built by a Philips, ancestor to the Andover Philipses. In my time it never was inhabited by the first people. The Post Office was kept here by Lydia Hill, and Molly Gill; and before that, the notable Abigail Allen kept school in this house.

Note. This house, which stood on the site of Mr. Henry Hale's building, stands now in the rear of that building, and is occupied by Mr. John Remond.

The next is owned by Elias Haskett Derby, Esq., at present untenanted. This house was built by Hon. Samuel Browne, who was born in 1669, was many years a representative, the first town-treasurer in Salem, a judge of the Superior Courts, Colonel of the Regiment and a Councillor. He was by far the greatest merchant in his day, in the County of Essex. He bestowed many valuable donations upon the schools; and died in 1731, aged 63, leaving this house to his son Samuel, who graduated in 1727. He married a Winthrop of New London, and died in 1742, aged 34. He was concerned in mercantile affairs, but his indolence preventing his giving much attention to business, most of his personal property was spent. He left this house to his son William, who graduated in 1755, was chosen representative in 1762, appointed Colonel of the Regiment in 1770, and a judge of the Superior Court in 1774. He studied law with Mr. Trowbridge of Cambridge: in 1774 was appointed a mandamus Counselor, quitted the town of Salem in October, and took refuge in Boston, and went to England in March, 1776, when the King's troops left Boston. During the course of the war, this house, and all his other estate was confiscated, which was the only property con-

Colonel Browne was appointed in 1780, Governor of Bermudas, where he remained sometime, and then went to London. He was a man of excellent understanding, a good scholar, of very engaging manners, and extremely beloved by the people of Salem.

> Note. This House was on or near the site of Mr. Kimball's hat-store, extending thence to the wooden buildings occurried by Mr. Roberts, confectioner.

> E. A. Holyoke, Esq., Physician, graduated in 1746, owns the next house, which he bought of Capt. Eben'r Bowditch in 1765, who built it in 1730. This Captain Bowditch married Colonel Turner's daughter.

> Note. This is the wooden building mentioned in the last note, and the land and buildings extended to the land covered by D. B. Brooks & Brother's book-store.

> The next is a shop owned by Mr. William King, and stands on land owned by the widow Rentall. A fire, one year ago, swept off two small houses between this house and Dr. Holyoke's.

> Note. This and the next building stood on the site of Mr. Stephen Osborne's building on the corner of Central street. See Vol. V. pp. 148-197.

- The next is a hatter's shop, owned by Mr. Breck the hatter; the land owned by the widow Rentall; this was formerly owned by the Brownes.
- 8. You now come to the street leading to the market; but crossing this street. Capt. George Dodge, merchant, lives in the corner house; this was formerly a wall house, and owned by the Brownes and sold by them to Mr. Waldo, who sold it to Capt. Dodge.

Note. "The street leading to the market," is now called Central street. The market-house was a wooden building, later known as Concert Hall fiscated in Salem. Mr. Browne's half broth- building; and was destroyed by fire in 1844.

Surgent, to dwell in On this spat was a very ancient house, as I have understood, built by a Philips, amester to the Andrews Philipson. In my time it never was inhabited by the first people. The Post Office was kept here by Lydia Hill, and Molly till; and before that, the notable Abigeit Aller kept school in this house.

Note. This house, which stood on the size of Mr. Heary Itale's building, stands now in the rear of day building, and is occupied by Mr. John Remond.

er, John Sargent, wont nway about the same time with him. Colonel Browne was appointed in 1780, Governor of Bernardes, where he remained sometime, and then went to London. He was a man of oscolizat understanding, a good scholar, of very cagaging manners, and extremely beloved by the people of Salem.

Note, This Hoen was on or near the site of Mr. Kimball's har-store, extending themor to the number buildings neck tell by Mr. Halvers, confertioner.

5. R.A. Holyoke, Esq., Physician, goalunted in 1740, owns the next home, which he bought of Capt. Elsen's Howlinds in 1765, who built it in 1730. This Captain Howdich mayied Colonel Turner's daughter.

Note. This is the wooden building mentlaned in the last sorte, and the hant and mailings everythed the land covered by D. B. Brooks & Borden's book store.

6. The next is a shop owned by Mr. William King, and stands on land owned by the widow Remiall. A fire, one year ago, awap off two small houses harveen this house and Dr. Holroke's.

Note: This and the next building road on the site of Mr. Stephan Ochorne's building on the corner of Control street: See Vol. V. pp. 143-157.

- The next is a latter's shop, award by Mr. Breek the hater; the had award by the nidow Rentall; this was famorly owned by the Brownes.
- S. You now come, to the street leading to the starket; but creating this street. Copt. George Dodge, merchant, lives in the corner house; this was formedly a well imme, and owned by the Heromes and sold by them to Jr. Wahle, who sold is to Cope. Dodge.

Note. "The waves landing to the marcet," is now called Courai arous. The market-house was a window indibing, tour known as Congres Hall building; and was destroyed by the in 1811. 9. The next house is owned by Mrs. Pickman, Consort of Benjamin Pickman, Esq., and was built by her grandfather, Col. Thomas Barton in 1710, he pulling down an old house owned by his wife's father, Mr. Nicholas Willoughby. This house is occupied by Mr. James King, Cashier of the Salem Bank.

10. The next is owned by Benjamin Pickman, the writer of this; was built in 1750 by Benjamin Pickman, Esq., father of the writer, who was born in 1708, the 8th February, and married Miss Love Rawlins of Boston in 1731. Having lived there four years with Mr. Atkinson, a merchant in that town, he moved to Salem where his ancestors had lived from 1661. Benjamin Pickman was chosen a Representative in 1744; was one of the committee of war in 1745, for carrying on the siege of Louisburg. For services performed in this business, the Province gave him a very handsome montiff. In 1756, he was elected a Counselor, and the same year appointed a Judge of the Superior Court; and in 1762, upon the death of Col. Plaistead, Chief Colonel of the Regiment. By great industry in Commercial business, and a thorough acquaintance with it, he acquired a very opulent estate. He was remarkably charitable to the poor; had an uncommonly quick discernment of all things presented for his decision; in the House of Representatives and at the Council-board, he had no superior. He died on the 20th August, 1773, aged 66 years, the delight of the town, and one of the pillars of the Country. Upon the death of Colonel Pickman, this house came by will to his eldest son Benjamin, born 18th Nov. 1740; graduated in 1759; appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the first Regiment in Essex in 1770. In March 1775, when a war with Britain was inevitable, he went to England, not thinking the conduct of the British King and Parliament, sufficient to justify a revolt. He stayed in England until May 1785, when he returned to Salem, where he was cordially received by the people. In 1788, when the town was dissatisfied with the conduct of Richard Manning, Esq., he was chosen Town Treasurer in his room, the town at that time owing a debt of fifteen thousand dollars. Where this house stands, once stood a house built by Henry Bartholomew, soon after the settlement of the town. This house was purchased in 1680 by Mr. Timothy Lindall, merchant, great-grandfather of the writer of this history. Lindall died in 1699, leaving this house to his widow, who died in 1732, and gave it to her daughter, Sarah Lindall. Mr. Timothy Lindall had the character of an honest, upright merchant. Sarah Lindall married Capt. Benj. Morshead of England, who did not remain a long time with her. In 1749 Mrs. Morshead gave the house and land to her nephew, Benjamin Pickman, Esq., who pulled it down in 1750, and built the present very elegant house in which his son lives, equal to any in Salem for convenience and beauty. In 1779, the out-houses belonging to this house, were burnt, being set on fire by a negro of the Rev'd Nath'l Whitaker's. I forgot to mention that Col. Barton was born in 1680; married to Mary Willoughby, daughter of Mr. Nehemiah Willoughby, in 1709; was a town clerk many years; a physician and apothecary, and Lieutenant Colonel of the Regiment; sustained a very fair and reputable character, and died in 1751, aged 71, leaving his house to his son, graduated in 1730, who dying in 1774, aged 64, it came to his sister Mary, widow of the late Doctor Bezaleel Top-Mrs. Toppan died in 1776, when the estate came to Mrs. Mary Pickman, her daughter and consort of the writer.

9. The next house is omind by Mrs. Pieleman, Consort of Boajania Pieleman, Esq., and was built by her grandfatter, Col. Thomas Harton in 1710, he pulling down on old house owned by his wife's father, Mr. Nicholas Willoughby. This hunce is occupied by Mr. James King, Cadder of the Salem Bank.

Note. Col. Pickman's house is now owned by Mrs. Le Masters, and is nearly opposite the head of St. Peter street. Mrs. L. has erected some stores in front of the house extending to the street.

11. The next house was built by James Lindall, Esq., on the spot where a fire began in his warehouse in 1698. Mr. Lindall was an opulent merchant, died in 1753, aged 77. The house then came to his children; and Timothy sold it to Capt. John Gardner, who died in 1683. It is now owned by Mrs. Gardner, and occupied by her, and Capt. George Smith, and Mr. White, Tallow-Chandler.

Note. This house stood on the site of the present building of the East India Marine Society.

12. The next house is Capt. Peter Lander's, whose father built it in 1765. On this spot stood a house owned by Major Pilgrim, which was burnt in 1698.

Note. This house is now altered into shops and offices.

The next house was built by Mr. Hirst in 1700, his old house being burnt in 1698. Major Walter Price married his daughter. Major Price graduated in 1695. Major Price was a considerable merchant in this town. This house was owned by him from the time Mr. Hirst died, till the Major died in 1730, aged 55. After his death it was purchased by Ichabod Plaisted, Esq., who married a daughter of Capt. John Browne. His son Ichabod graduated in 1745, died in 1755, aged 28. He was Captain of a Company. Mr. Plaisted was made Colonel of the Regiment in 1739, and a Councillor in 1759; died in 1762, aged 62. He was a man very much respected for his sociable qualities. his death, Somerville, a Scotsman, kept a publie house here, and afterwards William Goodhue, and after him Sam. Robinson kept Pubwick, a butcher, and owned by Daniel Rindge Esq., of Portsmouth, nephew to Col. Plaisted.

14. The next house which stands at the corner was built by Major William Browne in 1700, and given to his daughter Mary Lynde wife of the Hon. Benj. Lynde, graduated in 1686, appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court in 1720, died in 1744, aged 79. His son Benj. Lynde, was a Counsellor, and Judge of the Supreme Court, and died in 1781 aged 81. He graduated in 1718. These were men of slender abilities and owed their rise entirely to the Brownes. Judge Andrew Oliver lives here, the house owned by Mrs. Oliver daughter of Judge Lynde. Judge Oliver is son of the late Andrew Oliver Esq., Lieutenant Governor of the Province formerly. Judge Oliver graduated in 1749.

Note. This house stood on the corner of Liberty and Essex streets, on the site of the eastern end of the present Lynde Block.

15. The next is an old house owned by Mr. Walter Price Bartlet, which he inherited from the Prices; in front of it Ned Lang keeps an apothecary shop.

Note. Mr. Henry J. Pratt still keeps an apothecary's shop in the same building—succeeding Mr. Myrick, the grocer.

Note. This house is now the residence of Geo. F. Chever, Esq.

18. The next is Capt. Joseph Peabody's, which he purchased of the Grafton Family, who owned it many years. In this house formerly lived the Rev. Robert Stanton, the first minister in the East Parish.

Note. This house stood on the site of the residence of the late Thomas Trask, Esq.

19. The next is owned and occupied by three old maids, Graftons. This house was bought of Mr. Giles, Cabinet-maker.

20. The next is owned and occupied by Capt. Nathaniel Phippen and Thomas Phippen, which they inherited from their grandfather.

21. The next is a very small house, late Wm. Phippen's, now occupied by John Edwards.

22. The next house is owned by Capt. Benjamin West, aged 55, who married a Phippen, whose father built this house; but it has been much beautified by the present owner.

23. You now go to the opposite house to Capt. West's, which is owned by Capt. John Gardner. This house makes the corner on the northern side of the street, which leads to the common or training-field. This house was built by Capt. Jonathan Gardner, in 1730; has undergone several alterations and in the present year has been much enlarged. Capt. Jonathan Gardner died in 1784, aged 86; was an opulent merchant, and much respected. He left this house and the spacious garden and field to his son John, who married a daughter of Capt. Richard Derby.

Note. This house is now occupied as a dwelling house, and by Gardner Barton, apothecary.

24. The next is Capt. Jon'a Gardner's, nephew to John, and was left to him by his father, who built it. Here stood a house which I well remember, owned by the Gedneys, and was built about the year 1660, by Mr. John Gedney, who died in 1688, aged 85. Here lived William Gedney, Esq., High Sheriff for Essex, who died in 1730, aged 62. It then came to Mr. James Grant, who married Mr. Gedney's daughter. Mr. Grant sold it to the Gardners.

Note. This house stood on the site of the house lately occupied by David Pingree, Esq., deceased. In the latter house lived and died Capt. Joseph White, the victim of the Knapp and Crowninshield tragedy.

25. The widow of Mr. William Jeffery owns the next house. She was daughter of Joseph Bowditch, Esq., clerk of the Inferior Court, and Town Treasurer. He was son of Capt William Bowditch, who married a Gardner, the owner of this house. It was built about the year 1655. At this writing, Mr. Nathan Reed, graduated in 1780, who married Mrs. Jeffery's only child, is building a very large house in the rear of this.

Note. The old house first mentioned above, stood nearly in front of Plummer Hall, and projected far into the street. Behind it Mr. Reed built his house, above described, which was subsequently occupied by Prescott, the father of the historian, who was born there. Later, Capt. Joseph Peabody removed to this house from the Grafton house opposite (No. 18) and lived there till his death.

26. The next is owned by Capt. Nehemiah Andrews, on the ground where stood a house owned by the venerable Governor Bradstreet, who came to this town in 1630. He lived to the year 1697, and then died aged 94. The town is more indebted to his exertions than to any other man's. I remember the house, which was pulled down in 1755.

Note. On this site now stands the mansion of Col. Francis Peabody, creeted 1819-21. A woodcut picture of the Bradstreet mansion may be seen nam was father to the present B. Purnare, the first surveyor under the new Constitution. Note: This lioner is new the residence of Gen

He ived to the year 1637, and then died and 164. The town is more indebted to his exertions than to any other man's. I remember from them, which was pulled down in 1755.

Note. On this sire now stands the muncion of foll-branch Postody couled 1310-21. A wood at picture of the Brakeryes mannion may be seen in Felt's Annals of Salem, and in a former number of these Historical Collections.

27. The next was built by Mr Miles Ward, Jr., who sold it to Capt. Nathaniel Ingersoll. In this house lived Richard Lechmere, Esq., Collector of the Customs in 1754. Mr. Lechmere was one of the best bred men in New England, and was nephew to Nicholas, Lord Lechmere in the reign of King George the First. Capt. George Williams, the present owner, bought this house in 1756. He is a wealthy merchant; was one of the Board of War in the Revolution War, and a great stickler for the Revolution.

Note. This house stood on the land owned by Col. Peabody, next west of his mansion. It was a three-story wooden house, and was taken down in 1839. Mr. George Williams was father of the late Samuel Williams, an eminent banker in London. One daughter married Dr. Moses Little, who built the house which stands on the site of the Grafton house heretofore described.

28. The next is owned by Mr. Daniel Ropes, which he inherited from his father Joseph Ropes.

Note. This house is still standing, opposite the head of Liberty st. It was till very recently the property of James N. Archer whose grand-father married a daughter of Mr. Ropes.

29. The next was built by Hon. William Browne Esq., who was born in 1639. He built it in 1698, having lost a house in the great fire, which destroyed his and many others. He died in 1716, aged 76, leaving a very handsome fortune. He bequeathed it to his grandson William who married Governor Burnet's daughter, and died in 1763, aged 54. He graduated in 1727. This Wm. from her son, and it was sold to the present owner Mr. William Gray, who has much be atified it. Wm. Gray was born at Lynn; is father and family removed to this town about 35 years ago. Mr. Gray lived with Saml. Gardner Esq., and afterwards with Richard Derby Jr. Esq. Mr. Gray pays the second tax in the town. By great application to business, good commercial intelligence, and obtaining large credit, he has acquired a very handsome fortune, which sits very easy upon him.

Note. This was afterwards known as the "Sun Tavern." Previously it was the residence of Hon. Wm. Gray. It was taken down before the present Bowker Building was erected. This last was built in 1830, by Mr. William Roberts who is still living.

30. The next was the Browne's, now occupied by Colonel Newhall late of Lynn, an officer in the army, last war, now an excise officer and horse-letter.

Note. Mr. Newhall was from that part of Lynn which is now Saugus. After the peace, he settled in Salem and kept a livery-stable. He had sons Thomas, Samuel and Gilbert, who followed the same business, and Joseph, a tinsmith, who died unmarried. This building is now occupied by the widow of John Simon, confectioner, and by Dea. John Carleton, dry goods dealer.

31. The next house was built this year by Capt. Joseph White, whose family or ancestors have lived in the town a long time; upon this spot stood a house which had been in the possession of the Osgood's for more than 80 years.

Note. This house still stands on the corner of St. Peter St., occupied by Miss Crane, milliner, and others. The brick building between this building and one previously mentioned was built by Capt. Jos. White for his barn. Afterwards altered to a shop, and for many years occupied by John Goodhue and J. G. Luscomb, jewellers, and others.

The Browne mansion-house is now occupied by Capt. Benjamin Webb, the tavern keeper—the most noted tavern in town. house was built by Wm. Browne, Esq., in 1652, who dying in 1687, aged 79, bequeathed it to his son, Benj'n Browne, Esq., who dying in 1708, aged 60 years, childless, left it to his nephew, John Browne, Esq. He died in 1719 aged 46, and left it to his son, Benj'n Browne, Esq., who many years represented the town in the General Court, and was Lieutenant Colonel of the Regiment. When the last mentioned gentlemen, Col. Benj'n Browne, was married in 1730, a vast sum in New England Shillings was taken from one of the chimnies in this house, which was hidden in the Dutch wars. Col. Browne graduated in 1725, died in 1750, aged 43. His widow in 1751 married to a Boston gentleman, after which the Rev. John Sparhawk lived in this house, where he died in 1755, aged 42; then Richard Lechmere, Esq.,—then Andrew Oliver, Esq.,—then John Turner, Esq., - then William Goodhue, tavern-keeper; then Sam Robinson, Tavernkeeper; now Benj'n Webb. John Browne, the last owner died in Boston 5 years ago, aged 54, leaving this house to his widow, who lives in Boston. She was an Allen.

I would observe that the family of the Brownes has been the most respectable family that has ever lived in the town of Salem, holding places of the highest trust in the own, county and state, and possessing great iches. Their donations to the schools have been considerable. Their mercantile engagements have very much contributed to the growth of the town. At this time the last mentioned house is for sale.

Note. Nearly on the site of the present "Essex House," which was erected by William Gray, Esq., as his residence. The western end of this building, was opposite the head of Central street. The "Essex House," stands farther in from the street than its predecessor, and also farther to the eastward.

37. The next house is a very handsome one, owned by Capt. Nat. West, who married the daughter of Elias Hasket Derby. This house he purchased of Andrew Oliver Esq., who bought it of John Turner Esq., who built it in 1748. On this spot stood Pratt's tavern, the most noted that was ever in the town of Salem. Mr Prat died in 1730 aged 61. This house was once owned by the Curwens.

Note. This was afterwards opened as a public house and known as the Mansion-house. It was first opened in 1833, on the occasion of the visit of President Andrew Jackson.

38. The next piece of land is owned by Molly Hathorne, which she purchased of Judge Oliver. On this land stands a shop occupied by Joseph Samson, the Barber; the next shop is occupied by Edward Gray, tertius, Painter; the next by Mr. Chase the shoemaker.

Note. This last was Mr. Abner Chase, a friend. 39. The next house is Jacob Ashton's, which he had of his father-in-law, Capt. Richard Lee, who died in 1767. On this spot stood a house belonging to the Willoughby's, and afterwards to Mr. John Gerrish, school-master, who married a Willoughby 40. The next is owned by Mr. John Saunders, shopkeeper, who bought it of Michael Moore's estate. Moore was a Jerseyman, commonly called Muttery Moore.

Note. This house was afterwards occupied by John Saunders, son of the above. He was Capt. of Salem Cadets, first Capt. of the S. L. I., a merchant in N. Y., and surveyor of customs afterwards in Salem. His wife was a Crowninshield.

41. The next is a shop occupied by Mr. Appleton, late of Ipswich, Cabinet maker, on Mr. Saunders' land.

Note. Mr. Appleton afterward owned and occupied a house in Central Street; and later still a house on the corner of Lafayette and Harbor Streets.

Mr. Henry Hubon learned his trade with him.

42. The next is a brick house built by Capt. John Gardner in 1763, now occupied by Samuel Robinson.

Note. This building is now occupied by Wm. Chase, hardware-dealer, & H. O. Flint, shoe-dealer below, and Bowdoin the dentist and others. Robinson formerly kept tavern here.

43. Back of this house somewhat westerly stands a house which was formerly a sugar house belonging to Hon. Benj'n Pickman, Esq.

Note. This house was purchased by Capt. Abijah Estes. It still stands in the yard of Messrs Smith and Manning, stable-keepers, who own it.

- 44. The next house is owned and inhabited by the daughters of the late Capt. Estes. Here lived 50 years ago Mr. Mayfield, the fattest man ever known in the town of Salem. The last two mentioned houses belonged to the Hon. Benj'n Pickman, who bequeathed them to his son, William, who sold them to the late Capt. Estes. A fine situation.
- . 45. The next is a very old house, ready to fall down, and owned by Mr. James King, and occupied by Capt. Wm. Hathorne who keeps a huxter's shop in front; this house is more than 100 years old. Here lived John Wolcott Esq., high sheriff of Essex, who graduated in 1721, died in 1747, aged 45; here lived also his father Josiah Wolcott Esq., Judge of the Inferior Court, who died in 1729. This house was owned by the Wolcott's and sold to the late Mr. James King.

Note. This building was nearly on the site of the building now occupied by Theron Palmer, slice-dealer, Mr. Peabody, dry goods dealer, and others.

46. The next is a small dwelling-house owned by Mr. James King, and occupied by Mrs. Brown, who sells English goods.

Note. This house still stands in the rear. On its side is now a private way, and a portion of Browne's Block.

47. The next house belongs to the Jeffreys, built in 1730. Here lives Edward Pulling Esq. at Board, graduated in 1775, Barrister at Law, and the fattest man in Salem. This house is directly opposite to the meeting-house, in which the Rev'd John Prince preaches.

Note. This building is now standing on Bridge street, nearly opposite the rear of the First Universalist Meeting-house, whither it was removed to make way for the brick building erected by J. & I. Newhall and Eliphalet Kimball on the site of the present Browne's Block.

48. The next and corner house is Stearns' and Waldo's new and clegant brick building, built last year by Col. Benj. Pickman, Major Jonathan Waldo, and Dr. William Stearns. Here stood a house built by the Prices in 1670, and sold to Mr. John Prat in 1725, whose widow removed to it in 1747, and kept the noted Ship Tavern, to the day of her death. This place was sold to Pickman, Stearns, and Waldo, by Mrs. Ruth Jeffry, daughter of Mr. John Prat, for £780.

Note. This building and its predecessor will be found noticed in the notes to Mr. Rantoul's "recollections," printed in the last Vol. of these Collections, pp. 193-248.

I have now described one of the oldest streets, and in which lived the most ancient and respectable families in Salem — the Bradstreets, Brownes, Gedneys, Prices, Hirsts, Lindalls, Bartholomews, Willoughbys, Gardners, Bowditches, Curwens.

49. I shall now proceed to describe Court Street. North of Stearns and Waldo's brick building is a house owned by Capt. Josiah Orne; built by his great uncle, Joseph Orne, and much enlarged by his father.

Note. This house stood on the site of City Hall.

50. The next is owned by Edward Smith, and occupied by Edward Killings, who keeps a shop.

Note. This house was on the site of the residence of the late Judge White. It was removed to the corner of North and Mason Streets, where it still stands. Judge W's house now forms part of the Hubon block.

- 51. The next is owned by Dr. Templeman, and occupied by Ebenezer Burrill, who lets horses.
- 52. The next is a small shoemaker's shop on Jeffry's land.
- 53. The next is a school house, kept by Mr. Frederick Frye, on Jeffry's land.
- 54. The next is Mr Ebenezer Putnam's. Graduated in 1785. This house was built by Capt. David Masury in 1768, and sold to the late Dr. Ebenezer Putnam, graduated in 1739. Here stood two old houses, owned formerly by the Shillabers.

Note. This house still stands on the corner of Church and Washington streets. David Masury formerly kept tavern here; here also, the Hon. C. W. Upham recently lived, who conveyed the same to Dr. S. M. Cate.

55. You now cross the street, and come to the house of Capt. Zadock Buffington, tavern-keeper. This house was built about the year 1675, by Daniel Eppes, Esq., who graduated in 1669. He kept the school in Salem, a great number of years. He died in 1722, aged 73. This house was sold to the Ornes. Mr. Timothy Orne lived here many years. After he removed, Thomas Somerville, a Scotsman, kept the sign of the Indian King, a public house. Capt. Jona. Webb kept a tavern here. Dr. Wm. Paine, who married an Orne sold it to Capt. Buffington, who has lately made an addition to it. He keeps the Ship Tavern.

Note. In Court st. where Buffington keeps tavern, it was said in former times, that Governor Endicott built that fair house in 1628, mentioned by historians.

P.

Note. This explains how the tradition, which appears now to be wrong, originated respecting the identity of the present building with the "faire howse" of Gov. Endicott. This old building still stands. After Builington, several others kept the "ShipTavern," till it came into the possession of its late owner, Gilbert Newhall, who occupied it as a residence, with his livery stable around the eastern and northern sides.

56. North of this stands the widow Chase's house.

Note. This house, afterwards occupied by widow Chase's son Philip, is now occupied by Capt. Benj. White.

57. North of this is a street. North of the street is a house owned by Mr Henry Rust and occupied by his son Capt. Henry Rust.

Note. This street, formerly County street, is now the eastern end of Federal st. The Rust house which has been moved eastwardly, some feet, still stands, owned by the heirs of widow John Gardner.

58. The next house was built by Mr. James Hooper, Boat Builder, and left to his sons, James and Robert. Capt. Jacob Very owns the western end, and the family of the Hoopers the eastern.

Note. This house is now occupied by Eleazer Hathaway, baker.

59. The most northern building is the grammar school-house, erected in 1785; the present school-master, Nath. Rogers, graduated in 1781.

Note. This building continued to be used as a school-house for many years; it is now occupied by masons and carpenters.

60. Formerly Mr. Guppee, a noted man in Salem, owned a house and garden north of this; but time has washed away the whole spot where his house and garden stood.

Note. This spot is now owned by heirs of Tucker Daland. Mr. Teague formerly lived on this spot. It has been surrounded by a bank-wall, on the eastern and southern sides.

61. We now cross Court St., and on the opposite side directly opposite to the Schoolhouse is old shoreman John Cloutman's house.

Note. This Cloutman house stood on land now included within the grounds of the court house built in 1841.

- 64. The next house is owned by Capt. Jona. Lambert, who bought it of the Glovers.

Note. This house is now owned by Capt. Samuel Day, and occupied by him, and Mr. Bowdoin, dentist.

65. Nearly opposite to Capt. Lambert's, somewhat north, stands the very elegant Court House, built of brick in 1785, on the spot where stood a brick school-house, built in 1760.

66. South of Capt. Lambert's is Deacon Lewis Hunt's house, built by his grandfather Hunt.

. Note. This house was recently demolished.

67. Cross the lane and on the south side, the corner house is Elias Hasket Derby Esquire's:—a very handsome brick house, built by Hon. Benj. Pickman Esq., and left by him to his son, Clarke Gayton Pickman, who sold it to Mr. Derby. This house was built in 1764.

Note. This "lane" is now Lynde street; and the house spoken of is now owned by Robert Brookhouse senior, and occupied by him and Charles H. Baker, U. S. N.

68. The next is Edward Norris's, Town Clerk. On this spot stood a house, burnt down in the great fire in 1774, in the month of October. The fire reached no further north.

Note. This house is now occupied by Dr. Neilson. In the rear Smith and Manning have a stable.

69. The next is the Widow Rea's; a brick house built by Mr. Samuel Field, and sold to the late Archelaus Rea. On this spot Mr. Field lost a house in the great fire, built by his father, a boat-builder.

Note. This house is now occupied by Mr. Samuel G. Ray, a grandson of Archelaus Rea.

70. The next is occupied by Mr. Thomas Newhall, owned by the widow Rea. West of these are Newhall's stables.

Note. This has been removed.

71. The next is a saddler's shop, Folger Pope, on the widow Coats's land.

Note. Folger Pope's shop is that now occupied by William P. Fuller, Tinsmith.

On this spot stood a large wooden house, built by Mr. Edmund Batter, who died in 1685, aged 77; a very respectable man. He left it to his son Edmund, who died in 1756, aged 84. This house was occupied by Nathaniel Dabney, apothecary, and was consumed in the great fire. There was no dwelling house at the time of the fire between this and Mr. Field's.

Note. Mulliken married a daughter of Col. Newhall. A son is living in Lynn. Son John went to the Eastward and was a tanner.

Edmund Batter was a tanner. He was son of Daniel B. and grandson of Edmund, who died in 1685. He married 1st, Martha Pickman, 2nd, Barbara Hyde, and 3d, Hannah Higginson, widow of Nath'l.

75. In the middle of the street, between Mullikin's shop and Stearns and Waldo's brick store, stood in my day, a watch-house, with a handsome wooden soldier, carved by Lemmon Beadle on the top. On the soldier was Anno Regina, in gold letters. 1712.

76. I forgot to mention that opposite to Mr. Derby's house, stood in the centre of the street an old wooden school-house, which was formerly the Court-House, and where the witches were tried. This Court-House was pulled down in 1760. My curiosity often led me to view the place where those unfortunate persons were tried, in those deluded times.

78. I left off at Mulliken's shop. Cross the street, and on the corner stands a brick house owned by Mr. Henry Rust, formerly of Ipswich-removed to this town when a lad and served his time with Mr. Jonathan Gavet, joiner. Mr. Rust made his money in the Revolutionary war, by considerable risks. Mr. Dabney, the bookseller, occupies one room in this house, for the sale of books; and an evening club meets in another room, called the Insurance Office. This is called the upper house, by persons meeting in the chamber in the first house described in this book. On this spot, Capt. David Britton lost his house in the October fire, 1774. Mr. Rust bought the land of Britton.

Note. This estate is now owned by Eben N. Price, and is occupied by him and others. The Horse Rail Road Office is located in it.

79. South of this stand several small shops, the land owned by the widow Ruth Ropes, great grand-daughter of Col. John Hathorne who died in 1717, aged 76. This house was burned down in 1774, the fire extending no further south.

Note. David Ropes, Silversmith; Capt. Jenkins, Cabinet-maker; Edmund Gale, Victualer, who was an officer in the Army of the Revolution, at one time occupied these shops. Capt. Joseph Ropes built the brick house now owned by Daniel B. Gardner, on part of this land; the rest is covered by Chase's brick block.

Mr. John Norris aged 40, raised his estate in the Revolutionary War.

I have now described the street which was paved in 1773; and whose ancient inhabitants were the families of Batter, Pickman, Parkman, Sewall, Marston, Orne, Cabot, West, Barton, Higginson. This street was formerly a swamp.

I shall now begin with the street, directly East of the one first described. A lane separates Capt. Benj'n West's house from Giffords. This lane is called Loader's Lane, from an old man Loader, a barber.

Elm Street was called Lodder's Lane, Ward's Lane, and Osgood's Lane; Plank Alley Lane, from its having a plank side walk on its Eastern side. The old man, George Lowder lived on the Western corner where the West house is.

Extracted from minutes now before me, taken at the time. On the 9th of August, 1708, Mr. Veren Lindall went from Salem to Haverhill; on the 29th the French and Indians attacked the town of Haverhill, and Mr. Lindall was killed, it being early on the sabbath morning; on the 31st, Mr. Lindall was interred. His two brothers James and Timothy attended the funeral of their brother. Veren Lindall was born on the 12th of July, 1689: killed 29th August, 1708, aged 20. The famous Indian Chief Assacambuit was at Haverhill fight. Veren Lindall marched from Salem under command of Capt. Walter Price.

In the street first mentioned in this book, Capt. Thomas Mason, aged 70, is the oldest male inhabitant. Opposite to the tavern kept by Capt. Benj'n Webb, and on the water, at about 300 yards from Webb's tavern due south is a market begun; the subscribers 40. The market was raised on the 24th October, 1793.

knows. But I expect a long confinement. We wants for nothing but our liberty. I am sorry to acquaint you with the fact of Capt. Waters being taken, his crew is parted; part of them are in Liverpool and Calvin White and Samuel Porter have gone to America in the savage sloop. I have sent you five letters and we have not had so likely an opportunity of a letters getting home as this is; on the eighth of December we came out of Cape Clear and on the 27th of the same in Lat " 37' and 38' Lon 4 We fell in with the ship Fone Capt John Lee from Liverpool mounting twenty six pounders and bound for New York. We engaged him warmly for three hour glasses When we received an unlucky shot which carried away our mainmas overboard and we was obliged to strike to him to keep us till the next day when he took out our guns and amunition and gave us our schooner for to make the best of our way home, on the 6th of January in Lat 39' and 30" Lon' we fell in with the ship Fanny Capt Wignal from New York he took us and carried us to Liverpool where we arrived the 29th of January and was put into prison where we was kept for three months; on the 5th of May we were taken out, and put on board of a tender, on the second of May we arrived in Plymouth, on the 4th we was committed to Mill Prison where we still remain and are likely to for lifetime for what we know of, or at least till the war is over and how long that will be God only knows, but I hope and trust in God it will come sooner than we expect, We lost in the engagement one man John Sullivan an Irishman and two wounded; John Batten had his Shoulder broke and Thomas Stevens had his arm broke but they are all well. I am sorry to inform you of Wm Archer being left in Liverpool but I am in hopes he will be sent round with Capt Waters; Nathaniel Ward is well and here among us, and Clifford Crownshield. I have not heard from home since the 4th day of January. John Brickworth tells me he saw you on the wharf, it would be a great easement to my mind to hear from you. The time seems long and teagous to me; I shall embrace every opportunity of writing. We have plenty of provisions, the gentlemen have raised a large sum of money for the relief of the Americans. So I must conclude with my duty to my Grandmothers with love to my brothers and Sisters Uncles and Aunts and all enquiring friends. So no more at present but I remain honored Sir your dutiful son

JONATHAN ARCHER.

The above letter brought news of so much interest at the time to the friends and neighbours of the writer (many of whom had also relatives in Mill Prison,) that upon its receipt, his father mounted the steps in front of his door, and read it aloud to the interested crowd which the news of its arrival had collected together,

DRITUARY NOTICES.

The following notices of Members of the Deser Institute, who have decedeed during the year wave west at the Americal Mexican held on Wednesday, May 11, 1863:

RECEIVED THE SECTION WHEN TEXT OF THE SUSJECT OF this sketch, was born in Newton, on the 6th day of July 1830. His father, Siebard & Whentland, who son of Richard and Martin (Goodhue) Whentland, born at Salam, Yeb 10, 1799, graduated of Harvard University, 1799, graduated of Harvard University.

versity, in the class of 1818, for many years a shipmaster in active business, and died in his native city, Feb. 6, 1842.

His mother, Mary Bemis Wheatland, the daughter of John and Anna (Bemis) Richardson, was born Feb. 17, 1795, and died at Newton, December 31st, 1834.

Richard, being thus about 4 years old at the time of his mother's death, was placed in the charge of his aunt, Mrs. Nathaniel Bemis, then living in Watertown, and he there remained until April 1836, when his father removed to Salem, bringing with him Richard, and his only brother Stephen G. Wheatland. They took up their residence in the house in Essex Street which has been for so many years in the occupation of the Wheatland family, and Richard continued to make that his home until the time of his decease.

In 1836 he commenced his attendance at the school of Miss Mehitable Higginson, for many years a noted teacher in Salem, which he left in 1840 to enter the Latin Grammar School, then kept by Mr. Oliver Carlton, to prepare for College.

Here he spent six years. He was a bright and active boy, lively, vivacious, full of animal spirits, always ready for fun or frolic, and enjoying to the utmost all youthful sports and amusements. In 1846 he entered Harvard College, graduating in 1850. His College life passed quietly and pleasantly away. Devoting himself with regularity to the ordinary branches, but inclining rather to a course of reading outside of the required college studies, he maintained a fair position in his class. Here he had ample opportunity to indulge his social tastes, and he won the respect and esteem of his classmates by his unaffected kindness, his genial courtesy, the pleasant humor which pervaded his conversation, and by a purity of character as conspicuous in his college life as it was throughout his career. Here too he formed many and lasting friendships, not only with his own classmates but with members of other classes with whom he came in contact. In the recollection of these college days he found much pleasant food for reflection and conversation, during the long sickness which preceded his death, when confined to his house and deprived of his accustomed means of employment.

Upon leaving College he made choice of the profession of medicine, and entered the Tremont Medical School at Boston in 1850. remaining there about three years attending the lectures, and otherwise pursuing his studies with great energy and diligence. He then determined to reside for a time in Europe, in order to avail himself of the advantages which were there offered to a student of medicine, and he accordingly left this country in 1853. He remained in Europe about two years, spending most of his time in Paris, reading, attending the lectures, and visiting the Hospitals. He led, while in Paris, a quiet, sober life, laboring diligently. Before his return to America he visited Italy, Germany, Switzerland and Ireland, and made a pedestrian tour across the Alps, a journey to which his ardent love of natural scenery lent a peculiar charm. "Two months and more," he writes in a familiar letter, "we spent among the Alps, footing it among the mountains with knapsack and alpenstock, and never can I hope to realize so much pleasure from any other journey I may take. We visited nearly all the most interesting portions of the Alps, the Oberland, the Mont Blanc Range, Mt. Rosa, the great versity, in the class of 1818, for many years a shipmaster in active business, and died in his native city, Teb. 6, 1812.

His mother, Mary Bends, Wheatland, the daughter of John and Anna (Hemis) Hichardson, was born, Feb. 17, 1795, and died at Newton, Decomber 31st, 1831.

Richard, being thus about 4 years old at the time of his mather's death, was placed in the obarge of his aust, Mrs. Nathanist Bemis, then hiving in Westertown, and he there remained until April 1838, when his falbor removed to Salom, bringing with him Richard, and his only brother Stephen G. Whealtand. They took up their residence in the house in Essax Street which has been for so many years in the occupation of the Wheatland family, and Richard continued to make that his bome until the time of his decease.

In 1836 he commenced his attendance at the school of Miss Mehitable Higgmoon, for many years a noted teacher in Salem, which he left in 1840 to enter the Latin Grammar School, then kept by Mr. Oliver Carlton, to prepare for College.

Here he spent six years. He was a bright and active her, lively, vivacious, full of animal spirits, always ready for fun or frolic, and enjoying to the utmost all youthful sports and amusements. In 1810 he entered Harrard College, graduating in 1850. His College life passed quietly and pleasantly away. Devoting hinaself with regularity to the ordinary branches, but inclining rather to a dinary branches, but inclining rather to a course of reading entside of the required in his class. Here he had ample apportunity to increment and esteem of his classanates by the respect and esteem of his classanates by his manusceted kinducts, his genial courtesy, his genial courtesy, the pleasant humor which pervaded his conversation, and by a parity of character as conspicuous in the college life as it was throughout his career. Here tee he formed many and lastley friendships, not only with his own classes with when he came in cuttact, he ar classes with when he came in cuttact, in the recollection of these college days he conversation, during the long sickness which preceded his death, when confined to his home and deprived of his accustomed means of anylogment.

St. Bernard, the southern slopes, even more beautiful than those of the north, the hills of Piedmont, less visited but not less deserving, the Italian lakes Orta, Lugano, Maggiore and Como, where one sees the beautiful contrast of a tropical vegetation overshadowed by snow covered mountains, and the Swiss lakes which rival their southern sisters: indeed that of Lucerne is in my opinion the finest of all."

In 1855 he returned to Salem, and immediately commenced the practice of his profession, taking an office upon Essex street. Soon finding, however, that the condition of his health was such as to prevent him from discharging his duties as a physician, he was forced to abandon all hope of active practice, and accordingly gave up his office and removed his medical library to his residence. But his active mind could not long remain without some object of interest and inquiry, and he soon began to turn his attention to scientific pursuits. Led by early associations to feel an ardent interest in the fortunes of the Essex Institute, he found in the hours spent in these rooms an employment which was at once congenial to his tastes and which afforded him a special gratification as aiding in carrying out the objects of the Institution.

In May 1856 he was elected curator of Ichthyology and afterwards of Herpetology, and in May 1859 was made Cabinet Keeper, which offices he held until the time of his decease. He now devoted much of his time to the care and management of the zoological specimens, and to a general study of the animal kingdom, turning his attention largely to reptiles and fishes, and making a special study of the Batrachians, particularly of our own native species. In 1858 he enology under Prof. Agassiz. Here his first studies were directed to fishes, taking for this purpose the family of the Siluridae, and as he had at his command the specimen belonging to the Smithsonian Institute as well as those in Prof. Agassiz' museum, he was making from this large and rich collection a most thorough examination of the skeletons of the various genera for the purpose of ascertaining their limits. He was interrupted however by the removal of Prof. Agassiz to the new building, the Museum of Comparative Zoology. In this he took a deep interest, assisting with the utmost zeal in arranging the specimens, and laboring to so much purpose as to call forth subsequently from Prof. Agassiz the remark that Dr. Wheatland was in some respects the most valuable student he had ever had. This work occupied several months, and it is probable that his labors at that time taxed too severely a constitution little able at any time to bear severe and protracted exertion.

After the arrangement of the specimens in the new building, at the request of Prof. Agassiz, Dr. Wheatland took charge of the Reptiles, and began the study of the Turtles; but while thus engaged his failing health admonished him to give up his studies, and to seek relief from the symptoms of pulmonary consumption, which then began to seriously develope themselves, by a visit to a warmer climate.

In December 1860 he sailed for Buenos Ayres, remaining there for a few weeks and returning to Salem, June 1861. His hopes of relief from this voyage were utterly vain. A rough and tempestuous passage both going and returning, and the exposure to which he was subjected gave the final blow to his health, tered the scientific school as a student in zo- and he came back to his friends and home to

St. Hernard, the southern slopes, even more beautiful than those of the north, the bills of Piedmont, less visited but not less described the Italian lakes Orta, Lugano, Maggiore and Come, where one sees the leantiful contrast of a tropical vegetation avershadowed by snow covered mountains, and the Swiss lakes which rival their southern sisters: indeed that of Lucarne is in my opinion the fluest of all."

In 1855 he returned to Salem, and tunned diately commenced the practice of his profession, taking an office upon Essex street. Soon finding, however, that the condition of his health was such as in prevent him from discharging his duties as a physician, he was forced to abandon all hope of active practice, and accordingly gave up his office and removed his medical library to his redence. But his active mind could not long remain without some object of interest and inquiry, and he soon began to turn his attention to scientific parsuits. Led by early associations to feel an ardent interest in the fortunes of the Essex institute, he found in the hours spent in these rooms an employed meant which was at once congenial to his infection as adding in carrying out the objects of the Institution.

In May 1850 he was elected curator of lebthyology and electwards of Herpotology, and in May 1852 was made Cabinet Keeper, which offices he held until the time of his decease. He now devoted much of his time to the care and management of the zoological specimens, and to a general study of the animal kingdom, turning his attention special study of the Hatrachians, particularly of our own native species. In 1858 he entered the rejentific school as a student in zootered the rejentific school as a student in zooten.

After the arrangement of the specimens in the new building, as the request of Irof Agnesia Dr. Wheatland took charge of the Reptlies, and begun the study of the Territes; but while thus engaged his failing health admonished him to give up his studies, and to seek relief from the symptoms of pulmonary consumption, which then begun to seriously develope themselves, by a varmer climate.

In December 1860 he sailed for Morons Ayres, remaining there for a few wooks and returning to-Eslem, Jaco 1801. His hopes of relief from this coyage were utterly vain. A rough and temperatures passage both going and returning, and the exposure in which he was subjected gove the final blow to his health, and he came book to his friends and home to

for a short distance, but he was soon confined to his house, rarely going out except for an occasional ride. He lingered thus for several months, and on the 21st day of December, 1863, he passed quietly to his rest.

Such is the brief record of the career of our friend, the upright christian man, the thorough and truthful votary of science. Had his life and health been spared him, he would doubtless have taken his place among the most distinguished naturalists of the country. Upon his private character it is unnecessary to dilate. From his earliest boyhood, all, who have known him, will remember his genial and pleasant disposition, his kind and hearty ways. The tenacity with which Dr. Wheatland clung throughout his life to his early friendships and associations, was one of the most marked features of his character. It always seemed to give him the greatest delight to recur to the scenes and incidents of his early life. His schoolmates, the old places which he had been accustomed to visit, the fields and hills over which he used to roam, all were embalmed in his memory. Nor was it to his intimate friends alone that he displayed the natural kindness of his disposition. His sympathies and kindly feelings were bestowed upon all with whom he came in contact.

No vices marred the symmetry of his life. His daily walk was equally irreproachable, when living alone in the cities of Europe, as here amidst the restraints of his own New Though suffering from ill England home. health during a large portion of his life, yet such work as he was able to do, he did with his He bore his lot with firmness, best effort. and when at last the conviction came to him, that he must soon rest from his labors, it brought with it no despondency nor discour-

During his last and lingering sickness nothing could exceed the cheerfulness, with which he bore the confinement so foreign to his tastes and habits. Patience, a quiet resignation, an unfaltering trust, an unhesitating faith sustained him in his downward passage, and as his bodily frame grew weaker, his spiritual nature seemed to become daily stronger, and to shine forth with a yet higher and brighter light.

> Let us find some consolation for the loss of our friend, in the reflection that he has left behind him the memory of a life so pure and full of usefulness.

DANIEL CHUTE PERKINS, M. D., of South Danvers, was born Nov. 11, 1824, at Royalston, Worcester County, Mass. He was the second son of Rev. Ebenezer Perkins, for many years a settled clergyman of that place, and Amelia Parish Perkins. father was born at Topsfield in this county in 1794, graduated at Dartmouth college in 1814-studied his profession at the Theological Institution in Andover - was ordained minister of the church at Royalston Feb. 17, 1819; and died Dec. 3, 1861. His mother was the daughter of Ariel Parish who was born at Lebanon Conn., Nov. 29, 1764, graduated at Dartmouth in 1788, was ordained minister of the church at Manchester Mass., April 4, 1792, and died May 20, 1794.

Dr. Perkins received his academic education at the academy, in Keene N. H. where he remained until, in September 1844, he was admitted to the Freshman class of Amherst College. Here he pursued his studies with some interruptions for about two years, when impaired health compelled him to leave college.

His ardent nature could not endure the delay which he thus suffered in the preparation for the active duties of life; so that, as soon as his health permitted, he resolved at once to commence the study of medicine, his chosen profession. He attended his first course of lectures at one of the smaller Institutions of New England, but finally entered the Medical School connected with Harvard University, and in due time, received the degree of Doctor of Medicine, his diploma bearing date, March 8, 1850. For a short time he resided as a physician at Springheld, but a favorable opening occurring, he soon removed to Enfield. Here he endured the fatigues of a most laborious practice until November 1854, when circumstances induced him to seek a wider and more lucrative sphere.

Previous to his removal to South Danvers in August 1855, he attended an additional course of medical lectures at Philadelphia devoting himself especially to the study of Surgery, and in repeated instances he has since given proofs of high attainments in this department of his profession.

He was married Nov. 1, 1860, to Miss Mehitable C. Proctor, daughter of Abel Proctor Esq., of South Danvers, who survives him. His progress though slow was sure, and his practice had largely, and of late rapidly increased, the world seemed bright before him for a brilliant career of usefullness, when he was suddenly cut off by the untimely hand of Death, with scarcely a warning to his friends, on the 3d of November 1863, at his residence in South Danvers. At the time of his decease he was filling the offices of Chairman of the Board of Health, and member of the School Committee. He He was a firm friend of education, and his

He did not seem to take a mere mercenary view of his profession, he regarded it as a great science, adapted to the alleviation of human suffering, and fit to occupy the attention of the highest order of intellect. He therefore faithfully kept up with the literature of this and kindred sciences, and continued studiously, to the last, to enrich his own mind out of its treasuries of knowledge.

His parents were John Peabody, son of John and Lydia (Balch) Peabody of Topsfield, well remembered as a most estimable citizen, of decided force of character;* and Margaret Brown Peabody daughter of Stephen Brown of Hamilton. When he was quite young the family removed to the village of South Danvers.

At school he was marked among his fellows, as a boy of most brilliant parts and this intellectual superiority showed him to be one eminently well fitted for the higher seminaries of learning. This circumstance induced his parents to send him to the Topsfield Academy, to acquire the preparatory education for admission to college—he had there made considerable progress when the sickness and death of his father caused a change in the plans of his life; he turned his attention to business in his native town, and when quite a young man, entered into a partnership with Mr. A. Ives Jr. of Salem, which continued through life. He was married Nov. 12, 1857, to Sarah B. Pearce, daughter of Edward H. Pearce Esq. of Gloucester.

At the Bar Mr. Peabody fully justified the expectations of his friends. His mind easily grasped the great principles of law, and he acquired at once a respectable position among his brethren. His social qualities led him to take a large interest in whatever concerned his native town. He was frequently called upon to fill offices of trust and responsibility, was repeatedly a member of the School Committee, and of the committee and Trustees of the Peabody Institute. He also acted for several years as the legal adviser of the town. Generosity formed a most prominent and noble trait in his character, and none in need of assistance ever applied to him in vain. He died at his residence in South Danvers Nov. 4, 1863, leaving a widow and an adopted child.

He was educated principally at Andover Academy and at Mr. Tappan's school at Salem. At the age of fifteen he entered the counting room of his uncle Samuel Endicott at Salem, afterwards the counting room of Mr. William Ropes of Boston, where he continued as principal clerk and book-keeper until 1812. After the close of the war, be went to Sumatra as supercargo, and from that time until 1834, he was principally engaged in the Pepper trade at Sumatra as cap'ain and supercargo. In the spring of 1835, he was chosen cashier of the Salem Bank, and continued in that office until the spring of 1858, when he resigned. He was President of the Salem East India Marine Society from Jan'y 1839, to Nov, 1856, and was honored with other important places of trust in this city.

He married June 8, 1818, Sarah Rolland Blythe who died at Salem in 1859. They had two children, Charles Edward, and Ingersoll Bowditch.

The tastes of Mr. E. were literary, with strong proclivities of an antiquarian cast. He was also a good mathematician and navigator. His chart of the west coast of Sumatra from Analaboo to Sinkel, is a valuable contribution to the knowledge of that coast; it has been highly appreciated and much used by navigators; has passed through several editions, the first was published in 1833, the last in 1847.

Onlier't who may be justly termed, the father of American Botany, and from his lips received magnetism and nequired that love for the ottady of nature, more especially that of flowers, which continued through a long life and which was the colone of many hours of survey and affliction in his doclining years. On all suitable occasions he was accounted to allude to Dr. C. with much respect and exteem, regarding him as his great toxobar and treem, regarding him as his great toxobar and containing pleasing reminiscences of his percention, of the percentage of his pert Rev. Dr. Cutler of Hamilton was a power of great scientific culture. Representative in Congress and took a deep and lively increase in public solution. A memoir of his life and labors in in preparation by Rev. E. M. Stone of Providence R. L. Germerly of Havery Mass, and will undershoodly are long the given to the press.

sonal character, and of his zeal and attainments in botanical studies. He also mentioned, with pride the name of William Oakes of Ipswich, a native of Danvers and one of our most distinguished New England Botanists, who was accustomed to consult him in early life on botanical subjects, and ramble together in quest of plants, soon the pupil he would remark, became in turn the teacher. His knowledge of the Flora of this vicinity was extensive, and he always took pleasure in directing the student or collector to the localities of our rarer plants. He was accustomed at each annual Festival of the Essex Agricultural Society, to bring his bouquets of native plants for exhibition; though many of the flowers were not so gorgeous and splendid as their congener species of the garden or greenhouse, yet he prized them highly and considered them, more deserving the attention of our amateur gardeners and florists than has heretofore been given. Jacob Biglow M. D. of Boston, in the preparation of his "Florula Bostoniensis," was indebted to him for much valuable information.

He published in 1820, "An address delivered in Danvers before the society in that town, for suppressing Intemperance and other vices and for promoting Temperance and general morality April 25, 1820;" also in 1855, "Historical sketch of School District number thirteen. North Danvers or Danvers Plains." He also has written occasionally for the public prints, notices of the flowering of many of our native plants with their localities.

He removed to Danvers in 1805, and became a practitioner of medicine. At one period of his career, his practice was very the adjoining towns.

Here he continued to reside until his decease which took place May 26, 1863. He married 1st, March 25, 1807, Sally Webster, daughter of Luke and Sarah (Holten) Webster, and grandaughter of Hon. Samuel Holten of Danvers; she died Sept. 27, 1821, leaving no children - He married 2ndly, March 12 1822, Nancy, daughter of Moses and Anna (Towne) Endicott; born Aug. 31, 1788, she survives, and also a daughter, Sarah Ann, who resides in Danvers, and a son, Moses Endicott, who is connected in business in Boston. (See "The Endicott Family" by C. M. Endicott, in New England Hist. Gen. Register, vol. 1, page 342)

On a pleasant afternoon near the close of the month of May, his remains were taken from the church where the last funeral rites were performed and deposited in the Holten Burial ground, and according to his final request, bouquets of native plants, mingled with those of the garden and greenhouse, were placed around. Thus has passed away one, who, at the age of nearly four score years, retained the love of flowers and of nature acquired in early manhood. He was the last of those who were associated with the fathers of the republic.

Turnes Track, was been at Joh and Jano (Dimon) Track, was been at Salam, May 25, 1792. His Salam, a massed mariner, was see at Joh and Martha (Gray) Track and died at see Pale 1805. His method; daughter of Benjamin and Jano (Magford) Dimon, died at Salam, March 26 1814, aged 47, after a long and most distressing illness.

He atmitted recommends the schools of Martens Gray and Southwick, two of the nored tembers in Sulom at that period, and in 1805, went into the store of his uncle Israel Putnam. In this place he continued for seven years. In 1813, he was clerk in the private armed vessel Brig Enterprise, John R. Morgan, Commander—was taken prisoner and carried into Halifax; subsequently was for some time a clerk in the Post Office under Joseph E Sprague, and also in the office of the Clerk of the Courts for Essex.

In 1816, he went to Surinam, and continued to reside there until 1840, successfully engaged in mercantile and commercial pursuits. In 1819, he received the appointment from President Monroe of the United States Consulship at Surinam, and continued to discharge the duties of that office, in a highly satisfactory manner, under different successive administrations, for a period of twenty-one years, when he resigned.

In 1841, having obtained a competency, he returned to Salem, to pass the remainder of his days, in the quiet retirement of his native place; and on the 2d of May, 1842, married Eliza W. daughter of Charles and Lydia R. (Shillaber) Treadwell of Salem. She survives and several children.

He had been a member of both branches of the City Government of Salem — a Councilman, in 1846, and an Alderman in 1847-1849-1850-1851-1852, and had also been appointed to other places of honor and trust. He died after a long illness, at his residence in this city, December 19, 1863.

He had been a member of the Institute for several years preceding his death, and evinced his interest in the success of the Institution by his constant attendance upon the meetings, his frequent visits to the rooms, and his contribution of specimens to the Cabinet, and to the Library.

Many persons engaged in the various branches of industry connected with the construction and equipment of vessels, induced by the opening of the East India and other trades, at that time, successfully conducted by our merchants, came to Salem, established themselves in business and have contributed largely to its prosperity.

Our gleanings have been principally limited to this period, which may be considered as the "Commercial," and at this time the commerce of Salem was very extensive, and she was ranked among the first commercial places in the union - her ships were found in nearly every port, and her sails whitened nearly every sea in distant parts of the globe.

We propose in these sketches to subdivide our subject by localities, and to enumerate there built, noting many valuable and interesting facts and statistics in relation thereto, arranged partly in a tabular form, and partly in notes; the same are accompanied with brief notices of the several master builders and others, so far as we have been able to obtain the desired information. These sketches are necessarily very limited, and many facts will be found to have been omitted, or perhaps mistated, that would have otherwise added much to their value; the compiler is desirous that all such omissions and mistatements should be communicated to him, so that the same may be inserted in a supplementary notice; thereby rendering this portion of our local history more complete, and rescuing much that might otherwise be lost and irrecoverable.

Many of these localities have, within the past few years, been so changed that scarcely a single vestige remains, and soon all traces will entirely disappear to indicate the nature of the previous occupancy; thus affording illustrations to what extent the fluctuations of business in certain localities are consequent upon the introduction of new facilities in transportation and improved machinery in the various mechanical and other occupations.

NOTES TO THE TABLE OF VESSELS BUILT BY EBEN. MANN, MENTIONED ON PAGES 138 & 139

The Brig William was (after a few years) made into a ship, and Capt. William Mugford commanded her; and after the embargo, when the ship William became old and unseaworthy, she was bought by Retiah Becket, who drew her up on his beach, where she lay a great many years, and will be remembered by most of the old men of the present day.

The Christmas Day, 1794, was as hot as in July, and the boys went in swimming after the ship Betsey was launched.

The Brig Hind was made into a Barque in 1805, and Capt. James Brace commanded her.

The Ship Hazard.—This was the first of that name. She was built on a new plan, probably Peck's model as it was called, and her building was superintended by William Cleveland;—but she proved to be a failure, and was sold and went to Newport. The second ship Hazard was built in 1799, by Retiah Becket, and was one of the finest ships that ever sailed out of Salem.

Ship Pompey was sold to Joshua Ward, and made into a Brig, and commanded by James Gilchrist.

The Sch. Eliza was sold to Simon Forrester and made into a Brig, and commanded by Jeremiah Briggs, and afterwards by Thomas Bowditch.

The Ship Endeavor is still in existence, and sails out of New Bedford as a Whaler.

The ship Hope was sold for a Whaler.

The Brig Romp was confiscated at Naples on her first voyage, 1809.

The Ship Rambler was captured by the British in 1812, whilst under the command of Capt. Timothy Bryant, and was afterwards lost on the Chesterfield Shoals.

The Brig Gleaner was lost at sea. Her Captain was the son of the owner, Joseph Winn.

The Sloop Jefferson, George Crowninshield's pleasure yacht, was built by Christopher Turner, on Union Wharf, back of the store where Edward B. Lane's Sail Loft now is, and she was launched in March, 1801. She was schooner rigged at first, and afterwards made into a sloop. SOME NOTES ON WENHAM POND,

Read at the Field Meeting held on its western margin, July 27th, 1864, by

ROBERT S. RANTOUL.

Before the settlement of this now populous region by European colonists, it was, as is well known, the domain of the Naumkeags, a tribe taking its name from Naumkeag, which is now known as Bass River. They inhabited that part of Southern Essex County, which now comprises Salem, Mar-Ichead, Beverly, Manchester, Wenham, Day yers and parts of Topsfield and Middleton. This tribe was under the dominion of the -Sagamores of Agawam. Pestilence had shorn them of their ancient vigor, and when, in . 'S, Conant, from Cape Anne, pushed his explorations westerly into their country, he for I them reduced in numbers and waring w' a neighboring and much dreaded tribe. 1. 3 Sagamore, accordingly, welcomed his pale-faced visitors and hoped, through hospitality to them, to earn an invincible alliance against his enemies. He made them a free grant of the entire territory lying between Cape Anne and Saugus, embracing this beautiful lake and stretching nearly from Agawam or Ipswich river to the sea. Two years later came Endicott, with a charter or grant of all the land "between three miles to the northward of Merrimac river and three miles to the southward of Charles river, and in length within the described breadth, from the Atlantic Ocean to the South Sea." And so this settlement, having its origin in an abortive attempt to plant a fishing colony at Cape Anne, was established and confirmed and came to be the first permanent settlement in Essex County.

It is well known how dependent were the native tribes upon fishing, not only as a source of food, but as furnishing to their simple husbandry a fertilizing element for the soil. In this last regard the early settlers seem to have copied their example and their chroniclers speak of the soil being "fished but every third year," and of "striking at every plant of corn a herring or two."

The frail canoes of the Indians were of course quite unequal to the development of the coast fisheries, as practised later, not to speak of the more perilous enterprises of the

ROBBET O. BANTOUL.

Before the settlement of this now populous region by European colonists, it was, at a well known, the demain of the Naum keegs, a tribe taking its name from Naum keegs, a tribe taking its name from Naum keegs, which is now known as Issa liven. They inhabited that part of Southern Resea County, which now comprises Salem, Mardonest, Wenham, Johesad, Beverly, Manchester, Wenham, ton. This tribe was under the dominion of the fon. This tribe was under the dominion of the them of their ancient vigor, and when, in them of their ancient vigor, and when, in applorations westerly into their country, he for I them reduced in numbers and waring and much dreaded tribe. It Saganore, accordingly, welcomed his pale-faced visitors and hoped, through hospitality to them, to carm an invincible allipated grant of the entire territory lying become ance against his enemies. tween Cape Anne and Sairgus, embracing this, beautiful lake and strenching nearly from Agawam or Ipswich river to the sector or grant of all the land "between three ter or grant of all the land "between three miles to the northward of Merriman river and three miles to the southward of Charles river, and in length within the described breadth, from the Atlantic Goran to the South Sea." And so this settlement, having like origin in an abortive attempt to plant a fishing colony at Cape Anne, was established and confirmed and came to be the first permanent settlement in Essex County.

It is well known how dependent were the mative tribes upon fishing, not only as a source of food, but as furnishing to their simple husbandry a fertilizing element for the soil. In this last regard the saring at there seem to have copied their example and their chroniclers speak of the , sail heing their chroniclers speak of the , sail heing ing at every plant of sorn a herring or two."

course quite unequal to the development of the coast Haberius, as practiced later, not as speak of the more perilous enterprises of the Bay and Grand Banks. Hence it is easy to see how important to them was this large, well sheltered, and easily navigable body of water, crowded as it was with animal life. And we readily accept the legend that Wenham Pond was a favorite fishing ground of the Naumkeags.

The ancient piscatory wealth of these regions was something which seems almost fabulous to the modern reader. Naumkeag River took from the early settlers the name of Bass River, because of the multitude of that fish frequenting its waters. Higginson says in a letter to England -- "whilst I was writing this letter, my wiffe brought word that the fishers had caught 1600 basse at one draught, which, if they were in England, were worth many a pound." So Capt. John Smith, in his map of our coast, drawn from observation in 1614, designates this locality as Bass table. The ancient chronicles show that this abundance was by no means peculiar to a single river, lake or bay. We can with difficulty appreciate the condition of things which led parents, residing along the Merrimac, when binding their children as apprentices, to stipulate that they should not be compelled to eat Salmon more than twice in the week. Yet there are extant indentures of apprenticeship, in which the penuriousness of masters is thus strangely anticipated and rebuked.

To these general remarks Wenham Pond was no exception. The early Statute Books teemed with legislation framed to protect its fisheries, and the recently published history of Wenham, speaking of the disappearance of the alewives, which formerly came up Ipswich river to spawn in this ject of discussion in many town meetings, moment the Indian hunter crouching for and committees have been again and again appointed to see that the obstructions were removed, and the fish allowed to return to their favorite haunts. For many years an alewife committee was chosen every season, as regularly as the Selectmen or School Committee." Alewives are spoken of by Winthrop in connection with the early agriculture of the colony, and are, doubtless, identical with the Herring which Smith commends as a dressing for the soil.

Whether the falling off in our fresh water fisheries is due to the increased attentions of sportsmen or to the diminished vigilance of town functionaries, it is certain that their importance as an element of wealth, has been quite lost sight of, from the time when foreign commerce gave so preponderating an interest to the fisheries of the Banks. Since the Cod fish began to be a staple in our trade with Europe and Barbadoes, bringing to our bleak shores the generous products of the West Indies and the Mediterranean - since the effigy of the cod-fish found its place in our Legislative Hall, and upon our colonial currency, little thought or care has been given to the humbler claims of the fisheries in our lakes and streams. Few of us will hereafter be troubled with Salmon from the Merrimac more than twice in the week, yet we, who have been neighbors of this lovely lake, know, by the evidence of more than one of our senses, that the splendid pickerel and red-finned perch which helped to people these hill-slopes of old with deer-skin wigwams, are not yet extinct. And if the legendary fame of this fishing ground needs other support, - if our fancy needs help, in re-peopling these fields pond, says: "This matter has been a sub- with painted warriors and recalling for the

The charms which made this locality a favorite resort of the ancient land-holders were not lost upon their puritanical successors. Of the Naumkeag territory that portion lying about the lake was very soon peopled, and was the first to be set off from Salem, in 1643, as a district plantation or township, by the name of WENHAM. Farms lying "at the head of Basse River, by the Great Pond side," had been granted by Salem to "Capt. Traske, Jno. Woodberry, Mr. Conant, Peter Palfrey and John Balch, each 200 acres a peise" in 1635, and the village thereabouts seems to have been first known as "Great Pond." The earliest settlement of the place is supposed, says Dr. Allen, in his recent history of Wenham, to have been made near the lake. Indeed the first mention of the place, which that diligent historian was able to find, while it invests this spot with a tragic interest, gives countenance, at the same time, to the author's hypothesis. The first murder perpetrated among the colonists of Massachusetts Bay, was committed by John Williams upon the body of "John Hoddy, near the Great Pond." The supposed locality of this crime is on the road from Salem to Ipswich, householders, our ancestors opened the doors which hugs the eastern margin of the Pond, and near the present boundary line of Wenham and Beverly. This line runs due east and west, through Mt. Pleasant on this, the westerly side of the Pond, and near the Brown Cottage on the easterly side, and it is related that Hoddy's dog held Williams until the people collected, and apprehended him. The object of the crime was plunder. So it would seem that the travelled way first opened from Salem to Ipswich, lay by the great pond, and that there were, thus early, near the pond, people enough within call of the road, to prevent the escape of a criminal. As early as 1644, this road was laid out as a highway by the State.

Our ancestors well described this as the Great Pond. It has a surface of about 320 acres. The oldest residents upon its margin concur in saying, that, in all the vicisitudes of weather, a few inches will guage the fluctuations of its surface, while to reduce it a foot would require the drawing off of 104,544,000 gallons. It has no tributary stream to increase its liquid store, yet it constantly feeds Miles River, flowing to the east, through an outlet which is never dry. The words "great pond," have a peculiar interest to the student of Colonial History. In the sixteenth section of our first code, established in 1641, and known as the "Body of Liberties," it is provided that "Every inhabitant that is an householder shall have free fishing and fowling in any great ponds and bays, coves, rivers," &c., "provided that this shall not be extended to give leave to any man to roam upon others' proprietie without their leave." Having thus broken down all forest and game laws and made sporting free to all wild fowl among these very hedges, or silently watching, from his birob cance, the winding courses of his finey violinis, we may doubtless find such aid in the testimony of shells and arrowheeds, of the ponderous lower-jaws and annietakable furbarian skulls, which the ploughshare has from time to time profunely brought to light.

defines great ponds to be those containing more than ten acres, and adds that "they shall be free for any man to fish and fowl there, and may pass and repass on foot through any man's proprietie for that end, so they trespass not on any man's corn or meadow." Our courts have recently declared that this is still the law, - that proprietors of the upland about natural ponds own only to low-water mark, -that fishing and fowling, although the only uses enumerated, are not the only uses for which great ponds are dedicated to the public, but that among these free uses are boating, bathing, skating, preparing flax cutting ice, and the ordinary uses of water in manufactures, agriculture, and the domestic arts. mation in which these priveleges were held by our ancestors may be inferred from the fact that they were guarantied in the same chapter which secures freedom of speech in courts and meetings, freedom of emigration and the rights of the public on the sea-shore.

This Pond, as we have seen, lies low, being but about thirty-two feet above mean high tide. More than once have projects been formed for employing its waters in the useful arts. With one of these, as early as 1802, the name of Johonnot, whose Fulling Mill at the head of Bass River was among the first in the country, was prominently connected. But, from its want of natural elevation. Wenham Lake has thus far escaped most of the utilizing tendencies of the age. still wider in 1647, by an ordinance which as a water-power, makes it a store-house for defines great ponds to be those containing the waters of a great region.

Between the Lake and the hills, which form the western limit of this basin, and rise at points, from one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet above the water, will be observed a rare and singular formation. This ridge, called in the language of science a Moraine, but popularly known here as "Whale's Back," extends nearly the length of the pond from north to south. It is generally from fifteen to thirty feet high, is hardly wide enough at the top for two horsemen to ride abreast, and is said by geologists to be made up of small boulders and gravel of a different character from the native stones of this region. Its sides are steep and at some points it runs close by the water's edge, forming a precipitous bank for the pond. At other points it crosses smooth meadow-land at a distance from the water, suggesting an earth-work thrown up for military purposes. And once it passes under the lake, across the mouth of one of the large bays, and so near the surface of the water, that it has been possible to cross on foot over this hidden and narrow causeway from shore to shore.

This lake will be seen to be quite irregular in shape and much extended from North to South. It has at its northern extremity a long bay. Unlike the rest of the basin, this arm or bay is found to contain but about ten or fifteen feet of water, and its banks are low. Around the deeper portions of the lake its margin is often bold and picturesque, and there are points where its waters seem at some time to have receded from the upland which formed the natural limit, leaving between that and the present shore, many rods of meadow scarcely uncovered by them.

In the body of the lake the water measures from 40 to 50 feet, but there are spots where it is said that 75 feet of line have failed to sound. At these spots the ice in winter forms much more slowly than elsewhere, which indicates the presence of warm or moving water. They are known among the icemen, as spring holes. It was by skating into one of these that young Shillaber, a brother of the late Ebenezer Shillaber, for many years clerk of our courts, lost his life.

The theory that this pond is fed from the bottom by living springs, is not a new one. It is a tradition repeated with confidence by the oldest residents of this locality, and supported by the character of the surrounding region. Says Allen, "It is surrounded on every side by a smooth, gravelly or sandy margin;" and again, "the fundamental rock of the town is sienite, of the detritus of which, its soil is principally composed." And Sir Charles Lyell, the eminent British Geologist, who visited it in 1846, describes it as "surrounded with hills of sand and gravel, from 40 to 100 feet high" - from which and the additional fact that other hills lie behind these, the existence of springs might be inferred, and adds, "the water is always clear and pure, and the bottom covered with white quartzose sand. It is fed by springs."

We hardly wait for a chemist to tell us that this water is pure. The neighboring families use it and commend it for drinking, cooking, and washing. Dr. Jackson has just analized it and finds it purer than Cochituate or Croton. The former of these, which is the purer, is said to contain from 3.37 to 5 grains of impurity to the imperiare equal to 70,000 grains.

Dr. Jackson found the residuum left on evaporating the same quantity of Wenham water, to weigh but 2.22 grains and to be made up of Sir Charles Lyell, in his American Notes, just quoted, had already vouched for the absence of salts, citing no less an authority than Prof. Faraday. He says, "when a lump of Wenham ice has been brought to England, it does not melt by any means so readily as a similar lump of common English ice. Mr. Faraday tells me that Wenham Lake Ice is exceedingly pure, being both free from airbubbles and from salts. The presence of the first makes it extremely difficult to succeed in making a lens of English ice which will concentrate the solar rays and readily fire gunpowder, whereas nothing is easier than to perform this singular feat of igniting a combustible body by the aid of a frozen mass, if Wenham ice be employed.

"The absence of salts conduces greatly to the permanence of the ice, for where water is so frozen that the salts expelled are still contained in air-cavities and cracks, or form thin films between the layers of the ice, these entangled salts cause the ice to melt at a lower temperature than 32°, and the liquefied portions give rise to streams and currents within the body of the ice, which rapidly earry heat to the interior. The mass then goes on thawing within as well as without, and at temperatures below 32°; whereas pure and comal gallon of ten pounds, avoirdupoise, which pact Wenham ice can only thaw at 32°, and only on the outside of the mass."

So the experience of the neighbors is confirmed by the verdict of science.

We have been looking upon this landscape to-day under the delightful auspices of a summer sky. Let us reverse the picture. The verdure of hills and meadow is replaced by the white mantle of Winter. The surface of the lake, though motionless, still sparkles in the sun. Here and there are seen groups of skaters or sportsmen watching for pickerel through holes in the ice. The silence of an ancient solitude broods over the place. Such was the scene, unchanged for two centuries, until suddenly, about twenty-five years ago, this spot becomes a centre of attraction. Suddenly the quiet neighborhood is alive with the gingling of sleigh-bells, - gaily dressed parties are sweeping over the frozen lake in ice-boats and sleighs, and men by hundreds, and horses by scores are toiling, day and night, at the newly discovered husbandry. The virtues of Wenham Lake Ice have been proclaimed; the fashionable world of London and the thirsty East, have found it to be a necessity. Already Tudor, the pioneer in the exportation of ice, has demonstrated, since 1805, the success of the enterprise, which has rewarded him with a fortune, and commerce has at last disturbed the solitude of this retreat.

From 1805 to 1832, Tudor pursued, almost alone, the exportation of ice, at first with varying success. The trade being at last established, and new machinery for cutting and new expedients for packing and storing intro-

About ten years later operations began at Wenham Pond, and if the staple exports of Massachusetts have been correctly stated to be ice, granite, and school ma'ams, Essex has surely, since 1842, shown herself the equal of any other County in the matter of the first, without ever having been behind-hand as to the other two. Willis writes from London that this ice became the first favorite immediately upon its arrival and presentation to the Queen, - that highly decorated carts emblazoned with "WENHAM ICE," conveyed it about the streets, and that coekney admiration for it was unbounded. His exuberant fancy led him to say that the yankee sensationist had better come to England with his pockets full of this, than of gold. The wonder was, how the fashionables had existed before they discovered it. And the late Alonzo Lewis, writing in Feb. 1846, well describes the interesting process by which this ice was cut and stored, [for the details of which, want of time constrains me to refer to the American Almanac for 1849, which contains a complete history of the American Ice trade,] and adds that during that season, thousands witnessed the operation; that the ice was then fourteen inches thick, and was cut in blocks twenty inches square. Six hundred thousand tons of it, says Lewis, could be taken at one freezing. More recently, the apparatus used has been guaged for blocks twenty-two inches square, and the ice at Wenham, having at times attained an equal thickness, cubic blocks have been taken out, measuring thus nearly two feet in each dimension. In the middle of one of these blocks a cavity was made, in which was placed a fine pickerel, just from the pond, and water being poured in, the Says Professor Obses, of Brown University "The quality of water designated by the term hardness," is due, principally, to the presence of lines saits. These react, with the soap dissolved in the water, and decompose it, giving rise to inschible compounds of lime and the oleaghous constituents of the coap."

After Faraday's beautiful illustration of the crystal clearness of Wenham Ice, it is poor praise to liken this exquisite conceit to the designs of Bohemian glass-workers, or the specimens of flies in amber, which adorn our shelves. Through such blocks of ice the figures have been read upon a mason's rule. Says Allen, "The inhabitants of many a torrid region, who have never heard of the name of Massachusetts, and hardly know that there is such a place as New England, are familiar enough with Wenham Lake Ice. An American gentleman recently informed me that, while proceeding up the Red Sea in one of the East India Company's steamers, an Englishman, who had travelled much in America, inquired particularly of him, where Wenham Lake was situated, remarking that he had seen most of the lakes in the United States, but never saw Wenham Lake. From the amount of ice which it produced, he supposed it to be one of the large lakes of the Western Continent, and was not a little surprised when informed of its real size.

Just across the pond, and between the two lines of ice-houses easily discriminated by their color, flows the brook which carries the surplus water to Miles River, a tributary of Ipswich River taking its rise near Beaver Pond. Not far from the Lake, this brook crosses the highway, which here descends almost to the water-level; a little farther to the South, the road meets the margin of the pond, so that it is possible, by a slight diversion, to drive for some rods in the water.

Between the outlet and this point stood what Dr. Bentley, writing A. D. 1800, described as "a small conical hill near the five feet above it, - being grassy and smooth except towards the pond, and on that side abruptly cut down and steep. This mound, says Dr. Bentley, in his "Description of Salem," Hugh Peters chose for his pulpit when he preached his first sermon in America. This was also the first sermon preached at Wenham of which we have any record. The hour forbids even so much as a sketch of this interesting historical personage. He was a well-educated Englishman, who, after preaching with great acceptance in London, his congregation numbering at times, as it is said, seven thousand souls, was driven from his pulpit for non-conformity, and after a refuge of some years in Holland, came to New England in 1635. He became pastor of the first church in Salem the next year, succeeding Roger Williams in that important charge. Here he displayed those rare qualities of mind and heart which signalized him as the friend of the colony, and which marked his distinguished career after his return to England. Governor Winthrop found him to be "a man of a very public spirit and singular activity for all occasions." And Bentley adds that "a weak man could not maintain the popularity he had, and an ignorant man could not execute what he undertook." Besides achieving success in his pastoral charge, he entered largely into politics and trade, reformed the police, organized the fisheries, designing and building some of the first vessels adapted for that business, and was finally, in 1641, sent back to England with two other commissioners who were charged to represent the sense of the colony upon the laws of excise and trade. He followed "Lord Lieutenant Cromwell" into Ireland in 1649, and is said to have successfully led a brigade, although his position seems to have been that of Chaplain. Thus he entitled himself to be held the most odious of his calling, when, after the restoration, the profligate and licentious Charles burned, in his cups, with the desire the venerable Robert Brookhouse. In 1638 I, - a charge which he wholly denied - and he acted on a commission for collecting and at the age of 61, three days after trial, he was beheaded, with every circumstance of barbarity, and his head exposed on a pole on England of 1641, plunged him at once into London Bridge. He died grandly as he had the midst of that commotion which, next lived, unmoved by the horrors which surrounded him, and disavowing every unworthy came no less conspicuous in that tremendous act and motive. But the Solicitor General, in opening his prosecution, had said that his influence with the Parliamentary was at times his room-mate, and always his party was second only to that of Oliver Carlysle Cromwell, and after that, what defence could avail him? In person, says Dr. Bentley, he was tall and thin, active and sprightly, - his speech was peculiar, and he had the power of so associating his thoughts, that they could not be easily forgotten. His text when he preached across the Lake, was, "At Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there." Bentley adds, "The town held the name till it was incorporated. ter he presented to Parliament the colors of It is still remembered, and Peters' Hill is not five years had stood in the village of Wenham, quietly listening to more than 10,000 sermons, and to transport it from its old foundations to the very spot where Peters preached two hundred years before, and there, crowded with ice and flanked with ice on either hand, it stands to-day, enjoying perhaps a pleasing contrast to the doctrinal heat of its earlier experience.

These changes were made under the supervision of the gallant and lamented Lander, and here he began to attain that proficiency in engineering which enabled him to connect his name with one of the grandest summits of the Rocky mountains. But these changes, it must be remembered with regret, were not made without first giving to Salem an opportunity of saving the interesting relic. On March 3d, 1835, the Town of Wenham voted to grant Hugh Peters' Hill to the First Church in Salem, on condition that they would erect thereon a monument to their former pastor, the offer to hold good for three years. It was not accepted, and after the expiration of the time, the town's interest passed to the ice-company then formed, and we know the result.

Close by, and under a grand old elm, now the only monument which marks the spot, lived not long ago an interesting and venerable man. He was something of an anchorite and something of a philosopher. Having been in early life a teacher of youth, he bore to his grave the familiar title of "Master John." But, either from the proximity of his dwelling to this scene, or from the constancy of his affection for it, he was quite as well known as "Pond John." His memory was retentive, and with him perished a store of unwritten legends of the pond. Nature rarely unveils a lovely feature, but there is some responsive heart to be won over and filled with its beauty, and Pond John never spoke of the view upon which for three quarters of a century, his waking and his closing eyes had rested, but with the enthusiam of a lover. The smile of the Great Spirit seemed to have weaned him, in a degree, from the society of his kind. A man of contemplation rather than of action, he lived here alone, and died without descendants. Yet his kindly nature was continually manifest, and especially in the swing which, every summer, hung from the lofty boughs of the elm tree before his door. In this he delighted to give the passer-by a refreshing flight into the air. No stone remains, nothing but the old elm tree, to mark the spot where he lived and died. But no one can fitly speak of Wenham Pond without a passing word in memory of Master John.

The next point of interest in topographical order, is Balch Pasture. To reach this we have passed southerly from the outlet of the pond, and upon the high ground occupied by the stone colored cottage opposite, where lately resided Nehemiah Brown, for many years well known as Deputy Sheriff of the County. Just beyond that, stretched along the road upon the steep bank of the Pond, lies a tract of some twenty acres of pasturage and woodland of which no member of the legal profession can speak, but with feeling. Probably no lot of equal size in this vicinity, has been more fruitful of litigation. Indeed it should perhaps be known as Lawyers' Paradise or Goodacre of the Attorneys. Twice within a quarter of a century has a large fraction of it been claimed under adverse titles, and at least five counsellors were arrayed in each of those cases. It is the precise lofive years had stood in the village of Warham, quietly listening to more than 10,000 esercions, and to transport it from its old foundations to the very spot where Peters preached two handred years before, and there, woulded with ice and flaunch with ice on either hand, it stands to-day, enjoying perhaps a pleasing contrast to the doctrinal heat of its earlier orparience.

These changes for sand bares the supervision of the gallest and lamented Lander, and here he began to attain that proficiency in engineering which enabled him to connect his name with one of the grantlest enumits of the Rocky mountains. But these changes, it must be remembered with regret, mere not made without first giving to Salem an apportunity of saving the interesting rells. On March 3d, 1835, the Town of Wesham votad to grant Hugh Peters' Hill to the First Church in Salem, on condition that they would erect thereon a monument to their forwould erect thereon a monument to their former paster, the offer to hold good for three years. It was not accepted, and after thre gasted to the time, the town's interest pasted to the ice-company then formed, and we know the result.

Close by, and under a grand old clin, now the only monument which marks the spot, ired not long ago an interesting and venerable man. He was something of an anchorite and something of a philosopher. Having been in early life a teacher of youth, he have to his grave the familiar title of "Massion to his drelling to this scene, or from the proximity of his affection for it, he was quite as well known as "Food John." His means are tentive, and with him perished a store of unwritten legends of the pond. Na ure rarely unveils a lovely feature, but there a some responsive brare to be won over and filled with its beauty, and Pond John never poles of the view upon which for three quarties of a century, his waking and his cleaning yea bad rested, but with the ambasian of a cover. The smile of the Great Spira seemed to have weamed him, in a degree, from the century of his kind. A man of contemplation rather than of action, he lived here the without deaccondants. Yet is kindly nature was continually manifest, and despondity in the swing which, overy summer, hung from the lefty boughs of the alm rese batters his door. In this he delighted to the rese batters his door. In this he delighted to the rese batter his door. In this he delighted to the rese the mark the spiral where he had delighted to the rese, to mark the spe manner has the next and died. But no one can fifly speak of the old who one can fifly speak of the chartenery of Marter John.

The next point of interest in topographical order, is Haleh Pasture. To reach this we have passed southerly from the outlet of the pond, and upon the high ground occupied by the stone colored cottage opposite, where lately resided Nahemlah Brown, for many years well known as Deputy Sherilf of the County. Just beyond that, stretched along the road upon the steep hank of the Pond, and woolland of which no member of the Pond, and woolland of which no member of the lately gol profession can speak, but with feeling has been more fruitful of highest with feeling is should perhaps be known as Lawyer. Partaction of it has no century has a large within a quarter of a century has a large within a quarter of a century has a large flow, and at least five cobasillars were alverse tie of outles always and at least five cobasillars were arroyed in outle of those eases. It is the procisal in each of those eases. It is the procisal in each of those eases. It is the procisal for any or any or executed at Boston; and how many eminent advocates may have appeared in that cause, we cannot well determine, in the absence of our learned President who keeps the docket. This Balch Pasture is, no doubt, a portion of the original grant to John Balch made in 1635, of 200 acres near the great pond. It will be remembered that a thousand acres were granted by Salem to five ancient planters in consideration of public services, and Balch, who was one of the five, settled upon his grant, and died there in 1648. From Mr. Phippen's very interesting account of the "Old Planters before Endicott," published in Vol. I, of the Institute Collections, it appears that the widow of a descendant of Balch married William Dodge, who was the patriarch of the family of that name now so numerous in that region. For many years, Balch Pasture was in possession of members of that family, and it was appraised at the death of Deacon John Dodge, in 1825, as a part of his estate.

At the Annual Town Meeting, held on the afternoon of March 1st, 1842, the town of Wenham, supposing itself the owner of that portion of the tract which lies within its limits, voted to take possession forthwith, and to sell the wood standing thereon, at nine o'clock next morning, in lots to be removed at The sale at auction being accordingly concluded, the purchasers proceeded, March 2nd, to cut their respective lots and prepare them for removal. And from far and near. by children returning from school, and from house-tops across the pond, the operation was witnessed and denounced by indignant This work being nearly finished, Dodges.

cality of the highway robbery and murder of wood suspended their labors early. Mean-Hoddy by Williams, who was convicted, and time the word had gone forth, - the friends of the adverse claimants had been summoned, and soon after night-fall, under cover of the storm, with cattle and sledges, with lanterns and axes, they began to gather on the ground, resolved, to a man, that no stick of Balch Pasture fuel should ever warm the hearthstone of a purchaser from the town of Wenham. The wood was freely offered to those who would take it away, and the work of hauling it from the soil of the disputed territory into the highway, and from the highway to the wood-pile, went briskly on. Now the moon broke through the storm, and the heavy clouds rolled away. And there, from midnight till dawn, in the clear moonlight of that gusty March morning, load after load of cut wood disappeared, and trees, left standing, were felled and disposed of, so that, next day, when the claimants under the town arrived, to their utter amazement and discomfiture, they found their neighbors, after enjoying the fruits of their yesterday's labor, quietly breakfasting together by the road-side, while the contested portion of Balch Pasture, but the day before a well-covered wood-lot, was now transformed into pasturage indeed. This state of things elicited merriment on both sides. And the Courts afterward decided the question, which had occasioned this excellent "pass of practice," against the validity of he town's title.

The town's claim rested upon an Indian Deed from the heirs of the Sagamore of Agawam, now lost, releasing for £4, s16, all claim to the soil of the town of Wenham. It was dated A. D. 1700, and was like other deeds given by the same parties to Beverly, the same year, for £6, s6, d.8, and to Saand the afternoon inclement, the hewers of lem for £20, in 1686. The object of the Dodge claimants in their midnight raid, seems to have been to transfer the wood to estates where it could only be reached without trespass, by legal process - a course taken under advice of no less an authority than the late Benjamin Merrill, to the effect that possession was nine points of the law. The late Joshua H. Ward, at his death a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, was of counsel in this cause, and became so much interested in the locality, that he secured a portion of it, and, it was said, entertained the purpose of building there, until his death. Besides these, the learned President and Vice President of this Society, and I know not how many humbler members, are among that multitude of counsellors, whose pockets have been more or less distended with the fees of which these well-contested acres have been so prolific.

Much might be added, did time permit, of other objects of interest about the pond. The point at which we left the cars is the highest point upon the Eastern Rail Road, for many miles. Just beyond it, but a few rods towards the east, rises Brimble Hill, second in altitude only to Browne's or Folly Hill lying to the west. This last is the outpost of a ridge of hills, extending northerly towards Topsfield, and known at various points on the western border of the Lake, as Cherry Hill, Mt. Pleasant or Prospect Hill, and Lord's cue and Moulton's Hills.

Reaching the southerly extremity of the pond, at a point near the New England Ice Company's works, we passed, on our way hither, Boat House Cove, so called for a structure placed there when the Cherry Hill Farm, which comprised much of the western border of the Lake, was the property of Jocame to rest his great brain with his favorite diversion of fishing, and no doubt other eminent men, who frequented that fine old seat, after it-passed into the hands of Stephen White, found in the quiet lake a grateful contrast to the stormy sea of political and professional life. Other inlets figure in the journals of the Ice-men as Sandy Cove, Back Bay, and Holmes's Cove, the last commemorating a late proprietor of Cherry Hill. These journals read like the log-book of an arctic voyager. "Bright moon to-night .-Growing cool.—Pond cracking all over;" and again, "Glass 8° below, this morning -Grooved before daylight;" and again, "Sunset clear and cold,-fresh N. W. wind, cutting all day, and from 7 to 12 at night;"—such are the entries, and they need little help from the fancy to make some pages sparkle like an aurora.

We must leave what might be said of the old House at Cherry Hill built by Herricks, an old and honored family, whose initial letter appeared cut in its enduring frame, when it was recently removed by the present owner of the place. Here Willis felt some of his earliest inspirations, and here, it is said, began that political combination which made the second Adams President. And if the new house yet lacks such associations, the hospitality which made the place historic, has not deserted it. To that hospitality we owe much, gathered here to-day upon a portion of the old estate. Mt. Pleasant, at whose base we meet and from whose top we enjoyed perhaps the best panorama of this region, is the property of another. Its venerable proprietor can count there without a glass, thirty-six spires, on a clear day. It was on such a day, the first afternoon of the summer of seph White, of Salem. Here Mr. Webster 1813, that, in the quiet hours toward sunset, the Dodge claimants in their midnight raid, seems to laye been to renefer the word to extent tates where it could only be reached without trespass, by legal process—a course taken under advice of no less an authority than the late Renjamin Aluvill, to the effect that possession was nine points of the law. The late Joshua H. TWO OLD BIBLES.

There is an old Bible in possession of a lady of this City, who is a descendant of Col. John Higginson. It has come down to her by regular descent and is in a good state of preservation. It has been rebound within a few years, and may, with ordinary care, be preserved for many years to come. On the blank leaves are these inscriptions:

"Mrs. Mary Savage, widow, her book bought at Mr. James Whetcombe May 8th 1683. Cost 30 shillings."

"John Higginson, his bible, given him by Mrs. Mary Stoddard in her last will, 1710."

"Mary Simms, the daughter of Zachariah Simms, was born in Dunstable the 9th April 1628, and died 18th July, 1710, in 83d year of her age."

But although I have no free tenure of land, nor much silver and gold, yet I remember I have a coppie hold. Ah, Quoth the children, we could be glad to hear of that, and that is, I will be a God of thee and of thy seed, so you but sware your fealty to God as your king, and let God choose your inheritance and carry this coppie before the Court of heaven and Earth, and I dare engage you shall carry the cause."

NOTES BY B. F. B.

The foregoing appears to be in the writing of Mrs. Stoddard, who was the daughter of the Rev'd Zecariah Simms, the second minister of Charlestown. He was the son of the Rev'd William Simms and was born in Canterbury, 5th of April 1599—was rector of Dunstable 1625. He came to New England in 1634 with Rev. John Lothrop; William Hutchinson and his wife, the famous Mrs. Hutchinson, arrived 18th September.— His wife Sarah came with him and several children. He lived with her 50 years, and according to Mather they had 13 children of whom 5 were sons. Johnson, who was his neighbor in England, mentions the number of his children when he wrote as being 10, and following the example of their father and grandfather. Savage says he died 28th of January 1672, and his widow in 1676.

Mary Simms, daughter Rev. Zecariah, was the 2nd wife of Major Thomas Savage. His 1st was Faith Hutchinson, daughter of Wm. and the celebrated Ann H. By her he had 7 children. From one of the sons descends Hon. James Savage, to whom all antiquarians are indebted for that stupendous monument My dear wife, this day it comes to my of industry and accuracy, the Genealogical mind I must dye; that is certain; the time is Dictionary of New England. Jonathan Gardner, the original owner of this Bible, was a wealthy merchant and lived in the house on the corner of Essex and Newbury streets, now owned and occupied by George Creamer. He died Nov. 27th 1783, aged 85 years and 9 months. His first wife was his kinswoman, being the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Weld) Gardner. John was the son of Capt. Samuel G. whose wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Ruling Elder, John Browne. She was the widow of Joseph Grafton when he married her. Samuel was son of Capt. George G. who was the son of Thomas G. the first settler in Salem. Jonathan's second wife was a relative of John Avery of of Boston who was for many years Secretary of State, and his third was a daughter of Capt. William Pickering and Hannah (Browne) P. She died Feb'y 20th 1804, in the 90th year of her age. He was the son of Abel, by his wife Sarah, daughter of Israel Porter. Abel lived in that part of Salem which is now South Danvers, was a respectable man, Selectman &c. His grave stone is now in Harmony ing one son, Joseph, who died April 29th Grove Cemetery, in the south west corner, having been removed from the Gardner burying ground, when the road from South Danvers to the Grove was constructed. NOTICES OF REV. ASA DUNBAR.

As little appears to be known of this gentleman, who was settled over the 1st church of Salem as colleague with the Rev. Mr. Barnard, July 22d 1772 and dismissed 29th of April 1779 at his own request, in consequence of long continued ill health, I have thought the following notices of him worth preservation. Mr. Felt says he graduated at Harvard in 1767, came to Salem from Weston, and married Mary Jones of that place in 1772. The first notice is from a manuscript book, which appears to have been the property of Joseph Bowditch, son of Joseph and Sarah (Gardner) Bowditch. It was probably copied from some newspaper.

The second notice, which follows, is copied from a paper (found among others) of the late Miss Hannah Ropes, and was kindly loaned me by the Hon. Charles W. Upham. It was probably written by her Father, Major John Ropes,

"Rev. Asa Dunbar was born in Bridgewater, in the State of Massachusetts Bay, of respectable and pious parents; was graduated at Harvard University. Being a young man of much wisdom and very extraordinary talents, he was invited to preach before the First Church and Congregation in the Town of Salem, where the Rev'd Thomas Barnard was settled as Pastor, who from indisposition and the natural infirmity of age, was rendered incapable to perform the duties of that sacred office. There were several other candidates who preached occasionally, and one, the son of the venerable, and very respectable Pastor. The Church and Congregation were nearly equally divided between the two candidates, Mr. Dunbar and Mr. Barnard, and of course a separation was the inevitable consequence. Those who were in favor of Mr. Barnard built a new Meeting-House in the street which is now called North Street where he was ordained in the year 1773, (January 13th.) Mr. Dunbar was settled as Colleague with the Rev. Thomas Barnard over the First Church and Congregation about the same time. It is reasonable to suppose and keep truth on our side, that Mr. Dunbar was a man of very superior talents, as a gentleman who was as respectable for his talents and good sense as any one in the opposition, did say, "he never heard such excellent sermons delivered by any one in this Country! His hesitation in prayer might be unpleasant to many who heard him, but those pious, devout and fervent sentiments which issued from the store-house of his superior mind after that pause, raised him still higher in the estimation of those who were competent to decide on the excellency of prayer. Respecting his eccentricities and follies, (if he had any) the boy who knew him at that day, knows nothing about them!

HALE MEMORANDA.

OBJECTIONS TO MR. CHAMPNEY'S SETTLEMENT.

BY COL. ROBERT HALE.

COPIED BY E. S. W.

The following is the last of three manufore mentioned as having been preserved. It bears the following title:

Reasons of dissenting to Mr. Champney's Settlement 1729.

Wee the Subscribers (belonging to the first Church in Beverly) being unwilling that Mr. Joseph Champney should be settled in the Pastoral office over us offer therefor the following Reasons.

- 1 He was Introduced in a disorderly Manner-For the Committee who apply'd to him (tho. chosen by ye Parish) yet not only outwent the Orders of their Commission but also never made ye least return of the Business on which they went, to this day, except by private hints and Intimations and these laden with very unjust reflections and Aspersions-but
- 2 As they were sent by yr Principals to desire the Advice of the Ministers in the Neighborhood with Relation to our present Circumstances so twas expected that ye Advice should have been followed by them, but instead hereof they never delivered the Let ter from ye Ministers to ye Church and Parish and not only so but went directly to the Man whom of all others the Ministers told them they could not advise them to, and as a reward for the Pains and trouble those Gentlemen put themselves to with no view but to our advantage, it was infused into ye Mind of the People who are but too apt to be prejudiced against ye Ministers, that they refused to advise with the Comtee and would have no Conferenc with them: That the Ministers were desirous to be Lords over God's Heritage and to take away the Priviledge of ye Church, in choosing a Minister, out of their hands and that they had no regard in advising but only to prefer their own Relations; scripts in Col. Hale's hand writing hereto- the Contrary of which wee have since had all the reason in the world to believe is true; however 'twas tho't necessary to serve their turn; but for our parts as we feel 'tis a bad cause that needs lies to support it, so wee are ready to think that Cause bad, that is endeavored to be supported by Lyes were it for no other reason.

3 When Mr. Champney first came among us he was an utter Stranger to almost all ye Parish nor had wee any Account of him but from such as were almost as great Strangers as wee, and as we had but four Sabbath,s Trial before wee gave the Call so it can't be expected there was much gudgment us'd in ye matter, and though a former vote mentioned the Candidates preaching but four sabbaths before we proceded to have a meeting, yet our being Guilty of acting so rashly in passing such a Vote could be no Excuse for our Laying hands Suddenly on a man.

4 When the Church called Mr. Champney to ye Pastoral Office, it was upon Condition that he accepted of the Mode of Church Government called Congregational, as laid down in the Platform of Church Discipline of the Churches of New England. But his Answer of Acceptance of the Churches Call was on Condition of the Churches not adhering to the Platform and of the Paris'nes reconsidering their Vote about his Settlement and reversing it, neither of which were done and therefore no Acceptance of his Call, but instead of that the Church did then vote that they insisted on their first Vote relating to the Platform as they did at a Meeting once before this. However two or 3 days after this last Meeting the Church met, and Mr. Champney offered to accept of the Platform so Church upon a Surprise Accepted of his offer; had done but two days before can ever Imagine that they meant by that, to recede from one Article of the Platform; nor is it any wonder they should be unwilling to part with the Oenerous plan of power handed down From Age to Age, by our renowned Forefathers Unless they had had more forcible Arguments Us'd to dissuade them from adhering to it than so ridiculous a one as that, possibly one time or another it might be a damage to them as tho' it were not time eno' to throw it away when they found it did them a Mischief. And tho' some Churches in the Countrey may be unwilling to observe every Article of it yet if 'tis what wee choose we hope none will be so rigid as to compele us to relinquish it, and as unseemly wee deem it to be obliged to have a Minister set over us of different Principles from us, whom wee never should (for our parts) have call'd, had wee at first been appriz'd of it. Wee don't mean here, that we wou'd adhere to those parts of the Platform (if any such there be) that are disagreeable with the Holy Scriptures, No: we believe them to be the rule of our Faith and Practice; and all Humane Composures to be so, no farther than they are Agreeable hereto; Nor can we suppose any part of them to be disagreeable to the Word of God inasmuch as they were Composed and approv'd of, by all or most of the Primitive Teachers and Rulers Churches in this Land; men Eminent for Leanring and Picty. Yet at the same time we suppose that any Minister of what Denomination soever, whether Papist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian or Quaker, wou'd have taken up with the Platform on the same far as was Agreeable to Scripture and the Terms with Mr. Champney, since none (wee suppose) among Christians deny auy part of but no man that considers what the Church the Bible. And tho' the Churches accepthe reason in the world to helicve is true; however 'true the't necessary to serve their turns hat for our parts as we feel 'the a had course that needs lies to support it, so wee are ready to think that Cause had, that is sudear ored to be supported by Lyos were it for no other reason.

8 When Mr. Charaphey first came among as he was an other Stranger to almost all ye l'arish nor had were any Account of him but from such as were almost as great Strangers as wee, and as we had but four Sabbath, as wee, and as we gave the Call so it can't he expected them was much gudament us'd in though the Candidates pranching but four sale baths before we preceded to have a meeting yet our being finility of acting so reality per our being finility of acting so reality passing such a Vate could be no Exense for our Laying hands Suddenly on a man.

A When the Church called Mr. Champney to ye Pastoral Office, it was upon Condition that he accepted of the Alode of Church Government called Congregationsh, so laid down in the Platform of Church Discipline of the Churches of New England. But his Answer of Acceptances of the Churches Call was on Condition of the Churches not adhering to the Platform and of the Paris'res reconsidering their Vote about his Settlement and reversing it, neither of which were dune and therefore no Acceptance of his Call, but instead of that the Church did then rote that they insisted on their first Vote relating to the they insisted on their first Vote relating to the fore this. However two as 3 days after this fore this. However two as 3 days after this fact has heating the Church mer, and Mr. Champney effered to accept of the Platform so he has bleating the Church mer, and Mr. Champney effered to accept of the Platform so he has been man that considers what the Church upon a Supprier Accepted of his offer the owner that considers what the Church upon a Supprier Accepted of his offer but no man that considers what the Church but no man that considers what the Church tance of Mr. Champney's Answer at last might be Obligatory in point of Law, yet wee Conceive 'tis not so in point of Equity, inasmuch as the Church meant nothing less than the giving up the Platform or any particular Article of it, as (wee suppose) most of them will always affirm.

5 By means of the before-recited Steps that have been taken in introducing Mr. Champney, it comes to pass that (in case of his settlement among us) wee Miss of choosing one out of those 4 Gentlemen whom we have reason to believe to be of the Worthiest the Country affords and take one who (what ever others may esteem of him) does not appear to us to be endued with the best Gifts, and wee imagine that every man ought to Judge for himself, of what the Preacher says, & the those who were active in bringing in Mr. Champney in such indirect Methods may show signs of Repentance: yet as the Sin of Stealing is not forgiven unless the thing taken be restored, so we conceive that the Injury done us by receding from the Advice of the Ministers can't be repaired unless it still be followed; & tho' wee may be told that we might have mislik'd him (of those four whom the Neighbouring Ministers nominated) which the Church shou'd have chosen, yet wee Say that no man wou'd be willing to be whipt for a Crime which he never Committed only because the Lashes would be no heavier than if he really deserv'd them. And here such of us as voted for Mr. Champney wou'd say in Addition to what wee said under the 3d. Article, that tho. wee did not see Such reason to Vote against him as wee do now, so wee hope wee are not guilty of a 2d. error in being sorry for our first, but we can't tell how to account for the Practice of those who, (if wee may believe them) would be very glad if

Mr. Champney would l[ea]ve us of his own accord & yet bear the World in hand that they are very desirous of his Settlement.

And because it may be Objected to us by Some that we are about to make a Division & break the peace of the Church; wee answer that wee have no such Desire, but on the contrary, & if wee had, as the Case stands, it were impossible for us to do it, for 'tis beyond our power to begin a Quarrel with those who first assault us; & as the Comtee first gave Occasion of Offence, if any arise they themselves must Answer for it.

But upon the whole when wee reflect on the Disorder that has attended our Managements in this affair as: That the Com'tee betray'd their Trust, affronted the Ministers & deny'd them Common Civility: when the Ministers who Advised so disinterestedly & as wee have reason to think for the Honour of Christ & the Good of this People have been so Traduced & represented as so Unfaithful to the Interest of the Gospel-When wee have been disregarding the Plain & Positive Precepts of the Gospel-wee have lain hands suddenly on a Man to teach us & instead of coveting earnestly, have slighted the best Gifts, & have not had that regard to those precepts which show the Qualifications necessary in a Teacher that wee ought; Wee say, those things considered, inasmuch as we have not acknowledged God in our wayes, we cant Expect he shou'd direct our Paths, & instead of hoping that the Mercifule hand of Providence is Active for us in this Affair, Wee have no reason to Expect any other than that the hand of his judgments is putting out against us. And wee desire it may be Considered whether (if the Sin of a People as such is never punished but in this Life, & if every unrepenting Sinner shall receive tence of Mr. Champasy's Answer at last might be Obligatory to point of Law, yet wee Conceive 'tis not so in point of Equity, inassumed as the Church meant nothing less than the giving up the Platform or any particular Article of it, as (wee suppose) most of them will always affirm.

Mr. Champuey would Healts us of his own second & yet bear the World in band that they are very desirous of his feetlement.

And because it may be Objected to us by Some that we are about to make a Division & break the peace of the Church; we amount to that was bave no such Decire, but on the contrary, & if wee had, as the Ones stands, it were impossible for as to do it, for his beyond our power to begin a Quarrel with those who first assault us; & or the Creater first gave Occasion of Ottence; if any make they them they also were for it.

Punishment & if there can be no true Repentance without Res[titu]tion that this Church & Parish (as the Case stands) must necessarily be followed by Divine Judgments.

SKETCH OF THE REV. NATHANIEL WARD, OF IPSWICH.

BY STEPHEN H. PHILLIPS.

The Supreme Judicial Court, in a recent case, (Inh. of West Roxbury v. Stoddard et al. 7 Allen, 158) have asserted the principle that all great ponds in the Commonwealth were dedicated to public use by the Old Colony ordinance of 1641, or, to speak more accurately, that among the principles which the "Body of Liberties" declared, and which are now acknowledged to have the form of common law, was the most important one, that great ponds should not be the subject of private property. For the "Body of Liberties" is not strictly a statute. It is chiefly a bill of rights, and was wisely so intended to be understood by its framers. It indicates, but does not define, rights of which it acknowledges the independent existence, but to which it does not impart vitality.-Consequently no room is left for captious criticism about words, and great principles cannot be frittered away by strict construction. The case referred to is an excellent illustration of the effect of this declaration of rights. Our Court has been called upon to recognize the important principle that great ponds, like the air of heaven and the waters of the ocean, can never, under any pretence, or by any contrivance, be appropriated to selfish purposes, which for all purposes of public benefit, such as the maintainance of public water works, country, in 1634, to assume the charge of the rational amusement, and sustaining the mechanic arts every encouragement should be Our forefathers intended that we should never be vexed with game laws, or forest laws, or similar oppressive and selfish sequestrations of the public domain, and they were wise enough to provide against such mischievous tendencies in season, and with a degree of forecast which excites our warmest admiration.

The merit of this great work, for such it will be admitt d to be, even by the wisest men of the present age, is chiefly due to an Ipswich minister, and it becomes the leading historical society of the county to place upon its records some testimonial by which their appreciation of his services and merits may become manifest.

Rev. Nathaniel Ward, the second minister of Ipswich. was born at Haverhill, England, in 1570. He was the son of Rev. John Ward of the Episcopal Church, and was educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of A. M., in 1603. He read law in the Temple, and for a short time was engaged in its practice. To the advantages of a liberal education he added the benefits derived from continental travel, and at the University of Heidelburg he formed the ac quaintance of a distinguished doctor of divinity, who instructed him in theology. Upon his return home, he became a minister of the established Church, but having stated among other things equally heretical, that "the Church of England was ready to ring changes in religion; and that the Gospel stood a tiptoe to be gone to America," he was ordered to recant, by high authority. His proud spirit and unbending principles would submit to no such dictation, and he forsook his native first parish in Ipswich. Feeble health compelled him in a short time (1637) to resign his pastoral charge, but his legal learning and far reaching policy were of great service in shaping the laws and institutions of the infant colony. The fruit of his labors was the Body of Liberties already referred to, which was rescued from obscurity and oblivion by the late Mr. Francis C. Gray, (8th Mass. Hist. Coll. 3d series 191) and which is most approvingly noticed by the Supreme Judiciol Court in Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. R. 67, as well as in the case of W. Roxbury v. Stoddard, already cited. See also 2 Palfrey's Hist. N. E. 24, 25, and the "Notice of the Author appended to the Edition of the Simple Cobler in Agawam by David Pulsifer, Boston, 1843."-Felt's Hist. of Ipswich 219. Mr. Ward was compensated for his services by a grant of 600 acres of land in Haverhill, which he afterward sold for £12,00 (Pulsifer's notice). It is not a little amusing to contemplate the humble recompense which was thus received by this learned and wise man for his great It is at least incumbent on posterity work. gratefully to recognize his services and to endeavor to keep alive the recollection of them.

It should not be supposed that the task performed by Mr. Ward was one which merely fell to his lot and which would have been performed by some one else if he had not been selected. It is a task which but few men of any age could have performed, and its great merit has been conceded by our court. Com. v. Alger, ut supra. For a thorough analysis of its provisions the reader is referred to Palfrey's History, vol. 2 p. 26, and the document itself may be found in the 8th vol. Coll. Mass. Hist. Soc., 3d series utsub. See also Com. v. Roxbury and note, 9 Gray's R. 503. Perhaps it is not too much to say that many of the peculiar institutions of Massachusetts, the love of liberty, the high regard for private right, the jealousy of monopolies, the absence of great landed proprietaries are due to the recognition of fundamental principles by this body of law. The sovereign character of this colony is pretty strongly asserted, or at any rate implied by unmistakeable expression, and the people of the Maesachusetts Colony were thus early taught that they had a right to independence, which even a century of provisional rule could never induce them to forget, nd which, u pon the outbreak of the revolution, they were most glad to remember.

The history of the Body of Liberties will satisfy any one not only that it was the work of Mr. Ward, but that no one else eould have performed the task. Several undertook it.—Mr. John Cotton, minister of Boston and a ready writer, made the attempt and signally failed. Other abortive atiempts were made, but all were unsuccessful, until Mr. Ward prepared his draft, copies of which were sent into every town in the colony, to be carefully considered before it was finally and authorita. tively adopted.

The soldier who conquers a country by fire and sword, the robbing adventurer, who, tossed about by the wind and waves, first plants his foot on what afterwards becomes a great country, is thought worthy of a place in history, but how much greater claim has any man to kind remembrance by posterity, who shapes their civil institutions with a master hand and the salutary influence of whose labors is felt for centuries in all the relations of private life It is hardly too much to claim this merit for Mr. Ward.

Other abortive attempt and signally but all were unaboceastil, until Mr. Ward propared his draft, copies of which were sautenessery town in the colony, to be carriedly considered before it was hardly and authoritatively adopted.

It is hardly one much to claim this more for Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward is sometimes epoken of accombinable minister of N. Poplassi. He was, it is true, the minister of a young and probably a feeble parish, but he came here to escape persecution, and was by no means an insignificant, and we incline to think not a very humble, man. He was a person of great attainments and fine talents, and it was peculiarly fortunate that the colony could avail itself of his services at a critical moment.

Mr. Ward did not long remain in America, and he died in England (1653). Before he left he prepared and published that queer but most severe and able tract purporting to be written by the Simple Cobler of America and by which he is now chiefly remembered. This tract was reprinted a few years ago with a valuable prefatory notice by Mr. David Pulsifer, (Boston, 1843), and will repay a careful perusal. It is spoken of by Dr. Palfrey as a monument of the author's wit and intolerance, 2 Hist. 26 note, although that historian, like everybody else, pays the highest tribute to Ward's learning and accomplishments and recognizes in the "Body of Liberties" a great act of statesmanship.

Mr. Ward was a man of genuine wit and humor,—in fact, he had too much of it to suit the rigid puritans and drew upon him some little censure for his frequent pleasantry. He had engraved over the mantel piece of his house three words Sobrie, Juste, Pie, to which was added a fourth word, Lete.—These words describe his character.

We trust that, in view of Mr. Ward's great services and merits, his name will not soon be forgotten. At some future time, it may be practicable to give a more full and exact account of his life and services.

purchased the upper parish of Pembroke now called Hanson, in Plymouth County,—and died Mch. 16. 1731-32 aged 49 years.

Enos, the subject of this notice, learned the trade of a shipwright of his father, - after residing at Pembroke, for several years, where his five eldest children were bornhe came to Salem in 1790 and built the ship Grand Turk for Elias Haskett Derby, the eminent merchant of Salem, which was launched Mch. 10, 1791. He then returned to Pembroke for his family and they arrived in Salem on the morning of the 4th of July 1791. - The sloop, in which his family came, brought also the frame of his dwelling house, which is standing in Harbor street, for many years after his decease occupied by the family of his daughter Mrs. Nathan Cook; it is numbered, He died Oct. 10. 1819, having had seven children - viz: Sally, born Oct. 25. 1778, died April 9. 1856, at Salem - 1st married David Smith, 2nd John

Mary S. Bowles; Judith, born Aug. 26. 1786 died at Salem Sept. 3. 1836, married George Dean; Polly, born Mch. 1. 1789, died at Salem Mch. 24. 1834, married Nathan Cook; Betsey, born at Salem Mch. 19. 1792, died at Salem Jan. 7. 1814, unmarried; Rachel, born at Salem Feb, 28. 1796, died Sept. 1836, married John Burley—

The Salem Gazette of Oct. 12, 1819 thus notices his decease.

"In this town, Mr. ENOS BRIGGS, aged 73, one of our most valuable and worthy citizens. He came to this town from Pembroke, in the year 1791 and has been eminent as a master ship builder, from whose yard a great number of our best ships have been launched. He was also the master builder of the frigate Essex, the work of which did him great credit in the eyes of the nation. In his death his family suffer a severe loss."

lem—1st married David Smith, 2nd John Bott; Enos, born Mch. 25, 1781, died Oct.
9. 1837, married Lucy A. Morse; Samuel,

CRAFT'S JOURNAL OF THE SIEGE OF LOUISBURG.

COMMUNICATED BY W. P. UPHAM.

The following Journal was kept by Benjamin Craft, at the siege of Louisburg, in 1745. Benjamin Craft came from Connecticut and lived in Chebacco, now Essex, where he married Mary Choate. When in the early Spring of 1745 a call was made for volunteers to take part in the expedition against Louisburg, he enlisted, with others from Essex, and served through the siege. After the capture he remained at Louisburg, "having the care of the commissary business" of his regiment and "in considerable favor with several of the great men:" but in the following Spring, 1746, he died of the disease which swept away so many of the garrison at that time. He left three children, Benjamin, * Eleazert and Fran-

* * * * * We arrived in Canso ye 4th Instant after a long & tedious passage all in health, blessed be God; and when we shall sail for Cape Breton we cannot tell but I believe it will not be long before we shall. Capt. Donahue & Capt. Beckett have taken 3 Indians whom our General has examined & they inform of five or six hundred Indians that are about going or are gone against Anapolis; who are to be joined by 2 or 3 vessels from Cape Breton, so that we have reason to think that they have no news of our coming unless it is since our fleets arrived at Canso - Last Friday arrived in this port Capt. Fletcher of Boston with a French prize, a large sloop laden with rum & molasses and bale goods of considerable value; having letters for Cape Breton which inform of four more vessels coming from Martinico under a small convoy. MEMORIALS OF THE WASHINGTON RANGERS.

From the close of the Revolutionary War till 1805, but two uniformed williary companies existed in Salem. There were two at the commencement of that war, but they had a short existence. The Solem Gulate were organized in 1786, and the Salem Artillery the following year, the latter company couranting from some disagreement among cruanating from some disagreement among the signers to the former. The standing companies were then far from flourishing, and by 1800 were so completely demoralized that at the last parade of the Regiment, it was under command of a company officer and he the solitary one of that grade then in commission. In the spring of 1801, Genl. Gideon Foster of Danvers, then in command of the Division, issued orders to a number of gentlemen of the Town, to make an enrolment of all liable to military duty and to call meetings for the choice of officers. This was done and six companies were organized and officered. The Regiment was officered, with E. Hasket Derby as Colonel, Benja. Pickman as 1st Major and Wm. Prescott (afterwards Judge Prescott) as 2nd Major. John Prince Jr. was adjutant & the militia was thus placed on a respectable footing. Its first parade took place, in the autumn of that year, in a field in North Salem, near where the Laboratory now stands.

In 1862 the Common was levelled and (See Vol. 4 of these Collections graded. Page 2 and onward.)

In 1805 The Salem Light Infantry was formed and at once took that high position, which it has till now maintained, and it created such a spirit of military interest, that in 1807, The Salem Mechanic Light Infantry was formed. Its members were young Mechanics and it has always sustained the credit and respect due to that useful and respectable class of our citizens. In the same year, two companies of youths, between 14 & 18 years of age, not liable to military duty, came into existence. They were handsomely uniformed, fully equipped, admirably drilled and disciplined. Of one of them, The Washington Blues, commanded by Capt. George Brown, now living, I have no memorials. I idly failed and he soon relinquished it. The think it did not exist so long as "The Washington Rangers", of which I propose to offer such meagre memorials as I have been able to collect, partly from my own recollection, partly from some notices in the newspapers of the time and from some memoranda that have been furnished by two of the surviving members, Ephraim Emmerton & Wm. Archer Esqrs. I regret that after the most diligent enquiries I have not been able to find the company's records or papers. They were last known to be in possession of Miles Barnes who is dead and who has no near relatives known to me.

ORGANIZATION, FIRST PARADE AND UNIFORM OF THE RANGERS.

The preliminary meetings were held in the Old Hunt House that stood on the corner of Court (now Washington) and Lynde Streets, which has recently been demolished.

At one of these meetings Joseph Hunt, who had been active in getting up the company and who was a proper person for the situation was elected Captain, John Brown Lieutenant and Epbraim Emmerton, Ensign, together with George A. Ward and Wm. Proctor as Sergeants.

The first parade under Capt. Hunt was on the 18th of June, 1807. The company was then uniformed but the ranks were thin.

The uniform was a white dimity jacket and pantaloons, trimmed with red, a black velvet cap ornamented with a red band and tassel, and a half moon and star of white metal and surmounted with a red plume. The gaiters were black trimmed with red. The arms and equipments were such as were then used by military companies. Capt. Hunt's heal h was poor when he took command and it rapbe signers to the former. The standing ampanies were then far from flourishing, and of the 1800 were so completely demoralized that at the last parade of the Regiment, it was mader command of a company officer and the the sciitary one of that grade then in commission. In the spring of 1801, frenk of the Division, issued orders to a number of the Division, issued orders to a number relacent of all liable to military duty and to call meetings for the choice of officers. This relacent of all liable to military duty and to was done and six companies were organized and officered. The Regiment was officered, with R. Haaket Derby as Colonel, Hooja and officered, and the firmee dr. was adintent & the milities forwards. Judge Presentt) as 2nd Major. John Prince dr. was adintent & the milities was thus placed on a respectable feeting that year, in a field in North Salem, near therefore the own stands.

In 1862 the Common was levelled and graded. (See Vol. 4 of these Collections Fage 2 and onward.)

In 1805 The Salem Light Infantry was formed and at once took that high position, which it has till now maintained, and it orested such a spirit of military interest, that in 1807, The Salem Mechanic Light Infantry was formed. PRIORITY OF BULLET TRAIN, VOITASIRABRO

The preliminary meetings were held in the Old Munt Henre that stood on the corner of Court (now Washington) and Lynda Streets, which has recently been demolished.

At one of these mostlegs Joseph Huns, who had been active in getting up the company and who was a proper person for the situation was elected Captain, John Brown Lieutenant and Ephraim Emmerton, Ensign, together with George A. Ward and Wm. Proctor as Sergeonts.

The first parado under Capt. Hunt was on the 18th of June, 1807. The company was then uniformed but the ranks were thin.

The uniform was a white dimity jacket and pantaloses, triumed with red, a black velvet one partamented with a red band and tassel, and a balf moon and star of white metal and our mounted with a red plants. The militar equipments were such as were then used by wailtury companies. Capt Mant's head by way pour whom he took command and it cap idly failed and he soon relinquished it. The late Michael Shepard and Dana Lewis (who was afterwards Captain of one of the standing companies) were requested to take the vacant command, but they both declined.

In August or September, 1807 Benja. T. Pickman was elected Captain, and his acceptance gave such an impetus to the Company as to rapidly fill its ranks. A committee waited on him to notify him of the choice and he sent a written communication accepting it, of which the following is a copy

"Young Gentlemen:

My acceptance of the office you have conferred upon me, renders it necessary that I should briefly state to you the system it is my intention uniformly to pursue as your Commander. You cannot but be sensible that upon a proper degree of subordination to your Officers depends not only your respectable appearance but your existence as a Military Institution. You will not therefore be surprised that I should request of you a strict and punctual obedience to your officers.

We, in common with yourselves, solemnly pledge ourselves to be guided by our rules and regulations: and what can be more reasonable than that you should cheerfully obey officers chosen by yourselves, and those officers acting only as the enforcers of your own laws?

Believe me, Fellow Soldiers, -when I say that whatever measures I may pursue they will be dictated by a sincere desire of promoting your welfare.

Your candor will, I am sensible, rectify and excuse any trifling error in my own conduct. To most of you I am personally unknown, and with none of you have I had the pleasure of a particula. acquaintance. Yet tions except those which a sense of pro-

FIRST PARADE UNDER CAPT. PICKMAN.

From the Salem Gazette of July 5th, 1808.

"Washington Rangers. This military Corps has been formed upwards of twelve months and is composed of youths under the age of enrolment in the militia. Their uniform is white, trimmed with red; they are completely armed and equipped in every particular, and commanded by Mr. Benja. T. Pickman. Their handsome appearance and correct performance having attracted the attention of the citizens, they were requested on Monday last to perform the honors as an escort to the federal procession, and were also introduced into the line with the established Corps, and performed the march with them in the military procession, the firings and evolutions. Early on Monday morning they received from the hands of their Captain an elegant standard, with the following

Your officers present you this Standard, as a mark of their gratitude for the prompt attention you have evinced to their commands, and the absenty with which you have ever untleipated their wishes

You cannot but be sensible that volunteer institutions like our own, dependent to their existence upon the mere will of those who comprise them, unrestrained by any collections except these which a sense of prepriety may impose, can be preserved only by strict subordination and a rigid adherence to discipline and order.

Our association, if properly conducted, may be the means of much good. By thus early disciplining ourselves, we shall, when we arrive at the age of manhood, if ever called upon to assert our country's rights, or defend its independence, be the better able to discharge our duty.

I indulge the pleasing hope that, by your close attention to your duty, you will cause this institution to be distinguished for the correctness of its discipline and render it a fit nursery for soldiers.

(To the Ensign)

To you, Sir, as the proper officer to receive it, I commit this Standard.

THE ANSWER BY ENSIGN EMMERTON. "Sir:

In pursuance of the duties of the office with which my fellow soldiers have invested me, I receive from your hands this standard, and assure you, that my best endeavors shall be exerted to discharge with faithfulness the duties resulting from being entrusted with its care. I trust that your expectations will not be disappointed, but that the Washington Rangers will ever distinguish themselves by the propriety and regularity of their conduct, and the correctness of their discipline. This standard will always remind them of their duty, and animate them to the greatest exertions."

The standard seems to be irrecoverably lost. It was last known to be in the custody of Ensign Barnes before noted.

The Rangers continued, with varying success, five or six years, but from the very nature of its organization, permanency could not be reasonably expected. When the members attained the age'of eighteen they were absorbed either in the standing companies, or the Uniformed Militia Corps. It was first composed of boys belonging to both the political parties of the time and they cooperated harmoniously for a while, but as in the time of Hudibras,

"Party dudgeon then ran high

And men fell out they knew not why."-And the boys caught the contagion of their example, and political disputes were introduced into the Rangers. The majority of the members were Federalists. They were invited to escort a procession of Federal young men, July 4th, 1811, and at a meeting of the company after an animated discussion, the majority voted to do so. Upon this, most of the Republican members ((including the writer) left the company. There were, however, enough members left to make a respectable appearance and after escorting the procession, the company marched to North Salem and partook of a dinner provided by Mr. John Grant at his hotel at Orne's Point.

After this, I knew but little of the Rangers. I left the United States in the Autumn of 1812 and with but one or two short intervals did not return to Salem, till the midsummer of 1815, Capt. James Gould commanded them when I left and he says their numbers were much diminished during the war and, he thinks, they did not parade after he left Salem in 1815.

The list of members that follows comprises only a portion of those who enlisted during the first three years of the company organization.

of Deacon Lewis and Mary (Bowditch) Hunt; born June 28th 1789 and died August 7th 1808, unmarried. He lived in the old house before referred to and was a young man of much promise, but early fell a victim to consumption.

- 2. Benja. Toppan Pickman, son of Col. Benjamin Jr. and Anstis (Derby) Pickman, was second Captain, received a mercantile education, resigned command of the Rangers and went to Europe about 1809. Returning he settled as a merchant in Boston and married Hannah daughter of Wm. Smith of that city. He held a leading position as a merchant and citizen, and was much in public life, holding many important trusts in which he was very much respected. He was president of the Massachusetts Senate at the time of his death. MATERIALS FOR THE HISTORY OF SHIP BUILDING IN SALEM.

BY WILLIAM LEAVITT.

NO. III.

Notes to the tables on pages 172, 173, 174.

All the above vessels were built at Mr. Brigg's Ship yard, in South Salem, excepting three, viz: Ship Grand Turk, Ship Henry, Frigate Essex.

The Ship Grand Turk was built on the lot of land next east of Mr. Isaac P. Foster's store, so near to Derby Street, that her bowsprit projected partly over the street.

The Ship Henry was built on the Derby wharf, between the Blacksmith's shop, near Mr. L. B. Hatch's scales for weighing coal, and the first store, she was launched sidewise and was commonly called the Pine ship because Pine wood was largely used in her construction.

The Frigate Essex was built on Winter Island. G. L. Streeter read a historical sketch of the building of this Frigate, at a meeting. of the Institute, on Friday Dec. 12, 1856, and which was printed in the proceedings. (See vol. 2, p. 73). An insertion of the dimentions of the mast and spars of some of the vessels built at this period, may not be inappropriate in this connection.

The Ship Palladium was built under the superintendence of Capt. John White, and was considered, at the time, as the best built ship that Salem had produced. She was intended to be a regular Packet between Salem and Liverpool. The enterprise originated with the Traders on Essex Street, the dealers in Dry-Goods and Hardware, and could they have kept it in their own hands, the enterprise might have been successful, but they called in the assistance of other parties who changed the whole programme of the voyage, and the vessel was sent to Calcutta instead of Liverpool.

MEMOIR OF CAPT. WILLIAM NICHOLS, OF NEW-BURYPORT.

PREPARED BY THE REV. GEORGE D. WILDES.

Read at a meeting of the Essex Ins., Dec. 12, 1864.

It were to be wished, that in addition to the memoirs of those distinguished in the strictly naval history of our Country, those of men, prominent, in what was really a powerful agency for national success in the two earlier wars which are identified with our national history, had oftener found a place in the collections of the Biographer. In the future records of the existing civil strife, the annalist will find large occasion for the mention of deeds of valor, by no means confined to that arm of our service, technically termed the Navy. In the war of the Revolution; during the rupture with France, and in the second war of 1812-15, the naval service of the country was in large measure, a volunteer service. Although not incorporated with the national and recognized marine, and represented as an invidious instrumentality for purely selfish ends, the private armed ships of the periods already referred to are in reality to be classed and recognized as among the chief means for securing national success upon the ocean. Among the most distinguished in the history of this department of the national defence, no name is worthier of record than that of William Nichols of Newburyport. In the preparation of his memoir, I have been throughout, indebted to the notes of George J. L. Colby Esq., the Edmate friend of Capt. Nichols, and entertain confined to the war of 1812-15. During the ing the highest regard for the character, and admiration of the brilliant exploits of his venerable and deceased friend, Mr. Colby some years since prepared extensive notes of the personal history of Capt. Nichols, with which, I was fortunate, at a late day, in being favored, through the kindness of Capt. Benjamin Hale of Newburyport, a son-in-law of Capt. Nichols. But for the labors of Mr. Colby and the aid afforded by Capt. Hale, I should have despaired of placing the present memoir among the collections of the Institute; Capt. Nichols having left no papers, which were available for the purpose.

Capt. William Nichols was born in Newburyport in the year 1781. His father, at the time, a merchant in that town, had himself been distinguished in the naval service of the country. In 1779, while in the command of the ship Monmouth, in the well known Penobscot expedition, he was compelled, with other commanders, to burn his ship, upon the approach of the English forces. On his return from an expedition which reflected no discredit upon himself, Capt. Nichols engaged in mercantile life upon the same wharf, where sixty years afterwards in his old age, his distinguished son occupied a counting room. The father died young, leaving among other children, William and Samuel Nichols; the latter of whom, widely and favorably known as a shipmaster and merchant, still lives, we believe in his native town.

Chase of the Rose, rashly ventured upon a conflict, in which, under the circumstances, he could hardly have hoped for a favorable result. After a very severe encounter in which several of the American crew were killed or wounded, the privateer threw her men on board the Rose, finding the mate, a gallant seaman, in command, the Captain having retired from the deck. Refusing to surrender, and still continuing the battle, the mate and several of man did not beat strong and resolute, under his life, in this, as in all other of his naval experiences, he strangely escaped injury, and with the crew of the Rose was sent to Guadaloupe, whence, after a variety of adventures, he arrived at St. Thomas. Escaping from his captors, he found refuge in the mountains of the island, and eventually obtaining passage on board a Swedish brig, returned by way of Hispaniola to New York. It is a remarkable fact in this connection, that while on board the Swedish vessel in the West Indies, young Nichols should have witnessed the gallant exploits of Lieut., afterward Commodore Hull, then a youth of his own age, in cutting out a French 18 gun ship; and should himself, after some twelve or fourteen years, be captured in the Decatur, by the same briliant officer in the Constitution, under the supposition that the Decatur was a British letter of marque.

I learn that while the impressment acts of England were rapidly paving the way for the war of 1812, young Nichols was in command of the brig Alert, at Bordeaux, where, having run the English blockade, he had every prospect of most successful results from the voyage. The attempted run from Bordeaux, however, was destined to illustrate that prompt decision and utter fearlessnese in the nature of Capt. Nithols, whith eventually rendered his name so famous in the annals of the privateer serthe crew were killed, while others were selvice of the war of 1812. One who knew him verely wounded. None who ever knew Capt. well, has said of him, that for "daring and Nichols, can doubt that the lion heart of the bravery, he had but few equals; it was impossible to find a superior; for probably he never the youthful frame of the boy. Foremost in knew such a sensation as fear, in his whole all deeds of daring in every emergency of life; it was an absolute stranger to him; and therefore be was suited to become among privateersmen, what John Paul Jones is upon the naval records." I well remember myself, that in my own boyhood in Newburyport, upon the return of Capt. Nichols, then an old shipmaster, from any of his voyages, there was a never-satisfied curiosity among the boys, to see the man, whose traditional fame was that of one, "utterly without fear."

The experience of Nichols, while attempting a reuturn to the United States in the Alert, presents an early and most marked example of his daring courage. Leaving the port of Bordeaux with a full cargo of French goods, he was the next day captured by a British frigate, then upon the blockade. Taking, as I learn from the narrative of one evidently familiar with the facts, all his crew but the mate and three boys, the frigate placed a prize crew of nine men on board the Aleit, As associated with the period intervening and unfortunately for the captors, with Nich-

Doubtless of a lithe, compact no more prizes." Turning to his men and saying, "you shall be masters of this brig or I succeed on board a man of war, where the officers are true to their commander," he jumped alone between decks, and with a billet of wood felled the ring leader to the floor. The officers followed, and after a short conflict, order was restored.

But for the boldness and decision of Capt. Nichols in thus repressing the mutinous disposition of his crew, the cruise, doubtless, would have proved an unsuccessful one, and the commander himself, failed to secure in any future expeditions that character for daring courage, which rallied some of the bravest spirits of the war about him. Singularly enough on the very same day upon which the despondency of his crew had thus led to outbreak,-Aug. 22, 1812,-the Decatur captured the barque Duke of Savoy, of four guns, and with a large supply of other arms. On the next day, Nichols captured the brig Pomona; on the 25th the brig Elizabeth; and on the 26th, the brigs Concord, Hope and Devonshire. On the 30th of August he took the tarnsport barque, William and Charlotte of four guns, loaded with 500 tons of ship timber for the English government. On the 1st of September it was his good fortune to fall in with and capture the ship Diana from London for the West Indies, with a cargo valued at £80,000. The enemy mounted ten 9 and 12 pounders, but was not disposed to captured while in the hands of a prizemaster: the effect, that he would send his boat on the only fruits of the original capture, for Nichols and his crew, being an addition from her guns to his now almost replenished armament. Immediately after the taking of the Diana, the Decatur made prize of the brig Fame; cutting her out of a fleet of twenty sail, in full view of their convoy, the British frigate Amaranthus.

"Going to the main hatch with ers, and to man the guns. Yet it was prefirm and measured step, he demanded, "what cisely in these circumstances, that Nichols does this mean?" The reply was, "no more was called upon to meet one of the severest duty; the guns are overboard, we can take tests of his courage and skill. If it be remembered, that the exploits of these stalwart seamen of our northern coast towns, were in will, and to his officers, "a mutiny can never fact those of what may well take the title of a "volunteer navy," it will not be deemed out of place, to bring those of Nichols and others, into fuller notice than they have yet received at the hands of Naval annalists. The fame of Barney, beyond that of tradition, has commanded the public interest in later years, as worthily illustrated in a volume by the hand of filial affection. It is a question whether that of men like Nichols and Odiorne of Newburyport, Reid of New York, Harraden, Upton, Ropes, Kehew, Cheever, Breed of Salem, and others from our seaports of the county of Essex, might not find as worthy a place, in the naval biography of the country, as that of those, more widely known through published memoirs.†

I have said that the Decatur was on her return, being on the 6th of September, 1812, on the Banks of Newfoundland. The fog lifting, a large ship was discovered close aboard, which hoisting the English flag, immediately fired a shot over the deck of the Decatur. Whether the ship were a merchant man, or of the Navy was not clear; and it was a question which Nichols was not the man to leave unsolved. In any event, the odds would be against him; his own vessel being at the time so feebly manned. "Calling his few men aft he asked whether they would fight. The inquiry was answered by three cheers, and the brig immediately cleared for action. Hoistfight. The Diana however was afterward re- ing the English flag, he hailed the ship to narrator, rather than to render less graphic what is so admirably told. When it is recollected that the events of this cruise were comprised within a period of fifty days, and that in their most striking features, they occurred under disadvantages which would have appalled a feebler soul than that of Capt i Nichols, I think it will be admitted that the record of such a cruise is well worthy a prominent place in the Historical collections of the Institute. At all events, we can hardly join in the harsh critique of the Federal paper of Newburyport at that period, which remarked that, "This town is disgraced by two privateers"—one of which was the Decatur-"fitted out by Democrats; but fire."

Capt. Nichols soon sailed on his second cruise in the Decatur. His first exploit was the cutting out of the richly freighted ship til the Decatur not being in condition for sailing, was overtaken by the British frigate Surprise of 38 guns, commanded by Sir Thomas Cochrane. Even under such circumstances. Nichols as usual, must do something before surrender. His little brig was put into action, and her flag only lowered to a new lost one man killed and several wounded. It is said that when Nichols finally hailed that he had surrenderd, there was not a man plank in that part of the deck where he stood. Being carried into Barbadoes, where weremany captured Americans, - among whom I may remark, was the worthy and respected Dr. Browne of this city,-he was regarded alike by his enemies and countrymen with a curiosity and respect, which his exploits already widely known, were calculated to se-The commander of the Surprise admitted him to parole, doubtless feeling, that with a ship at all approaching his own in force, his own position would have been that of the gallant privateersman. to. I have preferred to use the language of the deck, and kept under constant guard day and night, and for thirty-four days, allowed to converse with no one."

From the record already referred to, I learn, that while thus confined, Nichols was visited by an old commander of a line of battle ship, and on being asked why he was there, stated the circumstances. The English officer said to him, that he had committed no crime; "on the contrary," said he, "such conduct should have given you the command of a frigate: and had you been in the English service, you would have been so rewarded." Through the isterest of this officer, he was removed to another ship, and sent to England. Again regarded as a criminal, he was sent on board a prison ship, guarded by twenty men, and they are not likely ever to set the river on heavily ironed. The sentence of death impended over him; but two British officers, upon the news of his treatment by our Government, were held as hostages for him, and the British Government informed, that their Neptune mounting 12 guns, from a large Eng- lives should be made to answer for that of lish convoy. Hull at Detroit, and awaiting the scaffold as deserters, our Government informed that of England, that two Englishmen would be hung for every prisoner so executed.

After several months, the prisoners were called together, expecting,-the Irishmen and heavily armed frigate, after the latter had particularly—that sentence was about to be executed. On being asked if he would engage in the war again, if released, Nichols replied, "Yes, as soon as I can get a vessel; and if I about him who was not wounded, nor a whole can do it in no other way, I will enter the American service as a common seaman." An exchange of prisoners however, had been determined, and Nichols was sent home to Boston in the ship Saratoga.

He was soon at sea. A brig of 300 tons, the Harpy of Baltimore, was then fitting out at Portsmouth, N. H., and Nichols invited to the command. At once upon the cruise, he was successful in the capture of ten prizes; two of raich were ships loaded with troops, and respectively of the armament of 20 and 10 guns. Nichols engaged in the merchant service, sailing for many years from his native town and other ports. On returning from the sea, he was made Collector of Customs at Newburyport, under the Administration of President Polk; manifesting in the discharge of that office, an integrity, knowledge and decision, which commended him to the high regard, alike of the administration, and those with whom he was called to transact the business of the port. Since the present civil strive commenced, he has been heard to express his regret, that his advanced years did not permit him to engage in the service of the country upon the sea. Had his years been only those of the noble hero of the Mississippi and Mobile Bay, and Nichols been placed in charge of a volunteer expedition for attacks upon the strong holds of Charleston and Wilmington, I cannot doubt that the name and fame of the gallant Farragut would have found a rival in those of the never fearing and dashing privateersman of 1812. For such men as the lion hearted Nichols, neither the casemates of Sumpter, nor the batteries of Wilmington would have proved anything but mighty constraints and arguments to the exercise of a valor, which never quailed under the fiercest terror of the cannonade. The battle thunder was to him an inspiration; the music to arouse and energize such a soul; and the flag for which he fought and suffered, the proud emblem of a nationality and a home, for which even in his old age, he would willingly and heartily, have expended the very life blood of his heart. As I have seen him since the present war commenced, either in his seat at church, or in his walks, still distinguished by something of the warriors port and step, I have felt that could the vigor of his youth, be restored but for a few years of closing life, the Republic that should place him upon the quarter deck of some proud ship of her navy, would need only point out the field for that bold spirit in its career of dashing and persistent courage. Whereever men would have dared to follow, Nichols in his unintermitted loyality and love for the Union and the flag, would ever have dared to

†For the following notes in reference to Capts. Upton and Odiorne I am grateful for the kindness of the Hon. B. F. Browne of this city; himself for a long period a prisoner at Dartmoor and other places, during the war of 1812-15.

Capt. John Odiorne received a mercantile education at Newburyport; of which place, he was I believe a native. He married a daughter of Offin Boardman, once an eminent merchant of that place. He had commanded merchant vessels previous to his command of the private armed schooner F olic of Salem. He made two cruises in her and on the first he captured 10 or 12 large vessels, part of a convoyed fleet bound to Miramichi and Pictou. On the 2nd, he was captured by the Sloop of War Heron, after a most exciting chase of 12 or 14 hours. Much of the time the Frolic was within reach of the guns of the Heron and part of the time within the range of pistol shots which were liberally besto ed on that part of the crew which the Captain retained with himself. No one who witnessed his conduct on that occasion (as did the writer of this note) can doubt that he was brave even to rashness. The writer can bear testimony to his activity, intelligence and kindness, and no one more than he can regret that his subsequent carcer was not more prosperous.

Capt. Benjamin Upton, while in command of the Private armed Brig Montgomery fought one of the most gallant actions of the war of 1812-15. It occurred on the 6th of December 1812, near Surinam, with an English Packet Brig of 350 tons, full of soldiers and mounting 18 guns supposed from her shot to be 18 pounders. The Montgomery was 150 tons and mounted 10 6lb guns and 2 18 pounders. The action lasted about 2 hours, and for 51 minutes the two vessels were board and board. Capt. Upton was severely wounded in the face, and was carried below; but the 1st Lieut. Henry Prince continued the action with much spirit, till the Montgomery being very seriou ly damaged, he hauled off for regains, intending to renew the action; but in the meanwhile his mtagonist escaped. The Montgomery had 4 killed and 16 wounded.

†The writer of this note, was carried to Barbadoes as a captive in January 1814. Mos of the time of his stay there, he was at large on parole, and mingled freely with some of the residents. He frequently heard Capt. Nichols spoken of, and the story of his confinement in the cage narrated. He left there, the character of great bravery, amounting to audacity. The vessel was dismantled and used as a Prison Ship; and the writer was confined in her a few days. Admiral Laforey was in command on the tSation, but was relieved that summer by Admiral Durham.

ELIAS JENKS.

Elias Jenks, son of Nathaniel and Content (Carpenter) Jenks, was born at Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 11, 1781.

His father, when Elias was quite young, removed to Brookfield, Mass., and married for his second wife Phebe Hathaway of that town. The children by the first wife were four sons, Welcome, Nathaniel, Elias and John, and three daughters, Nancy, Content and Catherine; by his second wife were Phebe, Tilley, Ira, Lyndon and Otis. In 1795 he moved to Lyndon, Vt., where he resided until his decease, which occurred in November, 1830, at the age of eighty-one years and four mouths.

Elias, from earliest childhood, evinced a strong predilection for mechanics, and was often employed in making models of boats and vessels. We next hear of him as a ship carpenter, in Salem, laying the decks of the ship Francis (a vessel owned by Capt. Joseph Peabody and built by Enos Briggs in 1807). He never served a regular appren-

Eliza Jenka, son of Nathaniel and Content Carpanter) Jonka, was been at Pawinekat,

His father, when Elizawas quite young removed to Brookfaid, Mass., and married for his accord wife Photo Haihaway of that fown. The shildren by the fire wife were four mass, Welcome, Nathaniel, Elias and four sens, Welcome, Nathaniel, Elias and John, and three daughters, Nancy. Content ha, Tilley, Ira, Lyndon and Oris. In 1795 he moved to Lyndon, VI., where he resided until his deepes, which occurred in November, 1880, at the age of eighty-one years and four meantly.

Elias, from ourliest childhood, evinced a strong profilection for mechanics, and was aften employed in making models of hoars and vessels. We next hear of him as a ship surpound, in Salem, laying the decks of the ship Phanels (a vessel owned by Capt Jaseph-Pachedy and built by those Hriggs to steph-Pachedy and built by those Hriggs to 1807). ticeship to this business; with early inclinations, a most acute observation and a dexterity in handling tools, he soon acquired a full knowledge of the details, and by a steady devotion to this one purpose, he rose to eminence and took a leading position among shipbuild-His vessels were all built according to true principles and well adapted to the uses for which they were designed; hence they were called "lucky." During several voyages, as ship carpenter, the last in the Privateer Brig Ino, which was built in Portsmouth during the war of 1812-15, he obtained much information, by personal observation at sea, of the good and bad qualities of the different ships.

He professed a decided musical talent, and found time amidst his laborious duties to cultivate it with success; he was a member of the first military band in Salem, formed under the auspices of the Salem Light Infantry, and learned to play on the clarionet during one of his voyages, receiving great assistance and instruction from Jonathan P. Saunders, the supercargo of the vessel.

He married Lydia Harvey, daughter of John and Lydia (Lander) Harvey,* Sept. 8, 1811. She was born Oct. 6, 1788, and resides in South Salem. He died May 14, 1850, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, having had the following children:

Lydia Ann, died unmarried. Catharine, died unmarried.

Louisa, married Geo. H. Emerson, now of Needham, Mass.

Henry Elias, married Ruth D. Millet, 1st wife; Sarah F. Safford, 2d wife.

Maria, died unmarried.

Charles Augustus, married Harriet E. Fitz of Somerville.

Sarah E. H., now living, unmarried.

George Franklin, married Elizaleth L. Brown.

Emeline Augusta, married Capt. James C. Ballard.

Ellen Lander, married Capt. John C. Berry.

Edward Harvey, died when an infant.

Mr. Jenks professed many good and noble traits of character, perfectly unselfish, free to communicate information, upright in all his dealings, and a beautiful childlike simplicity favorably impressed all with whom he held intercourse.

His grandfather, Capt. Stephen Jenks of Pawtucket, R. I., married Sarah Hawkins, and died in 1800 at the age of seventy four. He was a son of Nathaniel and Lydia (Arnold) Jenks, and a grandson of Major Nathaniel and Hannah (Bosworth) Jenks.

Major Nathaniel Jenks was much engaged in public life and repeatedly a representative for Providence, R. I.; he died in 1723, aged sixty-one; he was the second of four sons of Joseph Jenks Junior, who were all eminent in their day;—Joseph, the eldest, filled many important offices in the colony and was for five years the Governor, he died June 15, 1740, in the eighty-fourth year of his age;—2d, Major Nathaniel, above mentioned;—3d Elder Ebenezer, one of the Pastors of the Providence Church, died May 14, 1726, a man of parts and real piety;—4th, Judge William, died in 1765, at the venerable age of ninety-one.

Joseph Jenks, Junior, was born in England in 1632, and at the age of sixteen came to this country; his father, having preceded him several years, resided for some time in Lynn, where he married Esther, daughter of William Ballard. He then removed to Pawtucket, R. I., built the first house in that place, also a forge which was destroyed in King Philip's war. In 1681 was an assistant in the government, and died in 1716 at the age of eighty four.

Joseph Jenks Senior came from Hammersmith in England, a widower, leaving two sons with their maternal grandparents (according to tradition), and settled in Lynn, married his second wife, Elizabeth and had several children. He worked as a machinist at the Iron Foundry, and was a man of great genius, made the dies for coining the first money, built the first fire engine, was the first founder who worked in brass and iron in the Western Continent, by his hands the first models were made and the first castings taken of many domestic implements and iron tools. The first article said to have been cast was a small iron pot now in possession of the family of the late Alonzo Lewis, the Historian of Lynn: thus his name deserves to be held in remembrance in American History.

was born at Amesbury, June 21, 1793. He came to Salem in 1818 and engaged in ship-building. His first wife was Abigail Brown; his second, Nancy Herrick.

His father, Stephen Hoyt, was son of David and Judith (Currier) Hoyt, and lived at Amesbury, Pond Hills and Ferry. His mother was Ruth daughter of Isaac Randall of Amesbury. His brother, Stephen Hoyt, resided in Salem for several years engaged in business. He afterwards removed to St. Louis, where he held several important municipal offices as Mayor and Comptroller.—He is now the Mayor of New Orleans.—See Genealogical History of the Hoyt Family, by David W. Hoyt.

SHIP GEORGE.

The Ship George was built by an Association of Ship Carpenters, who were thrown out of employment by the war of 1812, she was built in 1814, for a Privateer, and her model was made by Christopher-Turner.

Peace came on before she was sold, another deck was then raised on her and she was made into a merchant ship, and she was bought by Capt. Joseph Peabody at $16.00 per Ton, who named her the George.

Some of the members of this association of Ship Carpenters were Elisha Day, Jacob Kimball, Zachariah Churchill, Charles Brown, Elias Jenks, Lincoln Stetson.

Her length was 110 feet and 10 inches, Beam 27 feet, her depth of hold was $13\frac{1}{2}$ feet and she measured 328 tons.

She proved to be one of the finest vessels, that ever sailed out of Salem, remarkably fast sailing, lucky under all commanders, always arriving with her eargo of Calcutta Goods, in just the nick of time, when the market for such Goods was at the highest rate, and the Goods in great demand; never lost a spar or met with an accident.

me, I am not the same man that I was, but I have been for a long time grieved & ashamed yt I have turned my back upon that holy ordinance of the Lord's Supper, and have sometimes thought I would indeavor to Joyne myself to the Church on the next Sacrament day, but doubts & fears have arisen yt that I had not faith of the Right kind & having read most of the books I could lay my hands on yt did treat on ye subject doo find that they Generally agree in their opinion yt faith is necessarily required of Every worth y communicant before he comes to the Lord's Supper, for they say yt ordinance is not instituted for the working of faith but for the strengthning thereof, it was not instituted for such as are out of Christ to bring them in but for such as are in Christ to bring them, up in him, but it is not necessary that all have the same measure, but must have the same truth of faith, you must bring some grace with you & come hither for more, you you must bring some faith & love & hope & come hither for more degrees of all these which to me has seemed as if a man must certainly know that he has faith before he might approach yt holy ordinance.

And some are of opinion that it being the Command of the Lord Jesus Christ that his disciples should celibrate the Holy Supper, that a probable show of faith is enough to Embolden our coming to the Holy table as are commanded, yea to come though we have many doubts and fears upon us, for while we have that probable hope, we do not know of any thing yt should hinder us and there are same weake Christians admitted.

Now I hope I have probable hope of some degree of Grace wrought in my Soule, I know there has been some change wrought in me, I am not the same man that I was, but hope I have some degree of sincere desire, hungry and thirsting after Jesus Christ, O yet it were more.

When I consider ye Command of God and the invitation of Jesus Christ I think it is a sufficient warrant for me to come in unto Jesus Christ & accept.of his terms & give up myself Soule & Body, all that I have into his hands to be guided & ruled by him & think I can say I believe, Lord help my unbelief and throw myself at the feet of my blessed and Gratious Savior & if I perish I will perish there.

And I doo think it my duty to lay myself under stricter obligations than hitherto & to profess repentance toward God & faith in Jesus Christ and that I doo choose the only true God, ffather Son & holy Ghost to be my God, & I desire to be admitted to Communion with this Church at the table of the Lord, that thereby receiving the Signes of Bread & Wine I might have communicated to my Soule things thereby signified, the Body & blood of Jesus Christ as broken & shed for me for the remission of my sins and increase of Grace thereby & that by the help of the Spirit of Grace I may be enabled to apply the value & vertue of the merits & death of Jesus Christ to my own Soule for the clensing purging & healing of my Soule of all filth & gilt of sin yt lies upon it, by that previous blood of sprinkling.

And I desire ye prayers, care & watch of ye Church over me yt that I may answer the End of my Creation even to Glorifie God by a holy conversation in this present world.

Depending upon the assistance of Grace to enable me to doo & suffer the will of God.
